NEW CHAPTERS

"AULD LANG SYNE" IS FINE AS NEW Year's benedictions go, but I'm partial to one from author and on-and-off Cantabrigian Neil Gaiman. "I hope that in this year to come, you make mistakes," he writes. "Because if you are making mistakes, then you are making new things, trying new things, learning, living, pushing yourself, changing yourself, changing your world. You're doing things you've never done before, and more importantly, you're Doing Something."

That sentiment hits home as I write my first editor's letter since filling Andrew Rimas' big shoes, but it applies to the whole editorial team. For our Health & Beauty issue, we ditched our regular routines, daring one another to try workouts outside our comfort zones. Bostonians now have Broga and barefoot boot camp, tabata and trampolining, and innumerable other options that make exercise a challenge instead of a chore. So why be stuck in a treadmill rut when you can prowl like a jungle cat or join a fitness tribe? We try a sampling of such workouts in our feature, which we hope inspires you, too, to tackle your resolutions with gusto and a sense of humor (and maybe a supply of IcyHot).

On the beauty front, Nancy Gaines raids local notables' grooming gear, revealing how our cover subject, Lindsay Buchholz, stays fresh-faced during her travels (not to mention how a Blue Man removes that greasepaint after long nights under stage lights). And Alix Childs gets expert guidance on combating winter beauty blahs. Once primped, read Jonathan Soroff's interview with photographer Peter Simon, who shares advice on taking selfies and highlights from a career capturing rock stars, major leaguers and Vineyard vistas. After five decades, he's still seeking new sightlines—a reminder that every year is a chance to see the world with fresh eyes.

28 Days Later

The evil genius behind jm Curley's foie gras-glazed jelly donut may not seem the likeliest candidate to co-found a wellness app. "I cook the food that I love to eat," says chef Sam Monsour, who recently left the Downtown Crossing bar to pursue new projects. "I'm also highly aware that that isn't the food that you can live off of." At home, he and his wife, personal trainer Astrid Bengtson, practice a paleo diet. "We've really investigated what that paleolithic-style life might be as well," Monsour says. Launched this month, their resolution-ready app, #true28, sets a 28-day challenge encompassing food, fitness and personal growth. In February, they'll lead a #true28 course at the Boston Center for Adult Education—but first, they gave us a peek at the four-part program. / Jacqueline Houton

PROVISIONS: "You're not going to convince someone to change the way they eat if you can't figure out how to satisfy their craving for fried chicken," Monsour says. "The goal is to push the scope of what the paleo diet is, because a lot of recipes out there are elementary." Expect recipes that use paleo ingredients but retain the big flavors Monsour's known for. There's even grain-free pizza. "It's good hot out of the oven, and it's also good cold the next day, a big selling point for me."

POWER: "Power is essentially the workout aspect, though I'd rather call it movement," says Bengtson, founder of the North End corrective-exercise studio Bodytalk Factory. To tap primal strength and counteract postural problems from all those hours we spend stuck behind a desk, she developed four weeklong programs of planks, lunges, squats and stretches. "It's funny she doesn't want to call it exercise," Monsour adds. "I can barely get through week one."

PRESENCE: "Modern Western society has made us all 'too busy,'" Monsour says. Presence, he says, is meant to help users "start reincorporating on a daily basis our intrinsic goals: our desire to help, personal growth and strengthening relationships." Bengtson adds, "These are things that we're hard-wired to do. We need them to feel happy." So the app offers daily practical challenges—say, respond directly to each person in your life who sends a message your way, be it by text, tweet, Facebook post or in person.

PROGRESS: The last component helps users track effects of interventions and decide what does (and doesn't) work for them. "We want you to have your data at the end: OK, when I ate these foods I felt great, and these were my favorite recipes," Monsour says. "It's a way for each person to individualize their results, because a month's worth of life can be a lot of information to take in."

MOXY TAKES MANHATTAN

ADAPTING FOR THE JAMES BEARD HOUSE

FOR MATT LOUIS, CHEF-OWNER OF Moxy in Portsmouth, N.H., "local sourcing" is a watchword, but one best modified by adjectives such as "practical" and "intelligent." That approach will be on display when his restaurant presents dinner at the James Beard House during the challenging late-winter month of March. "It's about using resources instead of putting walls up," he says, explaining his decision to expand his focus from New England to the Northeast.

"If we couldn't find what we were looking for, we'd look farther until we did," Louis says. "New York isn't that far away in the big picture." Nonetheless, Louis mostly stayed close to home, finding five New Hampshire wines and sticking to many of Moxy's tried-and-true "modern American tapas." For example, the "New England boiled dinner," presented at Moxy as lean slices of corned beef wrapped in nappa cabbage leaves, appears on the Beard menu in soup form alongside a tasting of oyster stew and a sunshine kabocha squash puree in a flight of soups.

Guests will "still get the tapas experience" as they sample a course called "Saturday Night Special": baked South Berwick beans with brown bread, Maine lobster and celeriac chips. They'll also enjoy a main course of juniper-rubbed venison tomahawk chop, with the rib bone left long to ensure a "very dramatic appearance." For dessert, Moxy's classic whoopie pies share space with black birch baked Alaska and something called the Boston Cream: honey cake with espresso pastry cream, covered in chocolate ganache and topped with marshmallow ice cream and espresso caramel.

TAPAS TIMES TWO

When will Barcelona Restaurant and Wine Bar be up and running in the former Sibling Rivalry space? Maybe in the spring. Or summer. Or fall. Adam Halberg, culinary director for the tapas restaurant group, says they're "not even swinging hammers yet" at the South End site. When they do open, however, Halberg says, "We'll probably pull some of our team out of Brookline," the Connecticut-based chain's first Massachusetts location.

ARTISAN APPROACH

BUILDING SOMETHING NEW IN ALLSTON

When Glenville Stops owner Mike Chapman buzzes about how menu and ambience can help his upcoming restaurant stand out from the many bro bars of Allston, he fails to mention the venture's singular distinction: He built the restaurant himself. Well, him, his son, the chef and a general contractor.

To create Glenville Stops, Chapman, who owns the building, knocked down the four retail stores that took up space on the first floor. The labor of love for this slim, bespectacled entrepreneur cost him three broken bones, including a shoulder. But he's already envisioning the hard work paying off soon.

In August, he hired Juan Pedrosa, former sous chef at Trade, to lead the kitchen. After laying the tile on the kitchen walls, Pedrosa started laying the groundwork for an ambitious menu that will include small plates and large plates. He's honed in on the small plates as a way to test unique dishes: longanisa sausage, lamb meatballs and a Puerto Rican-inspired ceviche. Among large plates, the free-range chicken will come with white-bean stew and rice cakes (a spin on the usual rice-and-beans side). Slated to open in February for dinner, the restaurant will add a weekend brunch in the near future.

"We have to have comfort food. But if we can do it, I'd like to move away from it a bit," Chapman says. "I hope the clientele we attract here will reward or appreciate something a little bolder."

A lot of the clientele that Chapman is looking to attract are women, whom he says don't have many dining options in the neighborhood. With no TVs, stained-glass lights, warm colors on the walls and a "pretty trick" sound system that will keep ambient sound low, Chapman believes his neighborhood tavern will have the right stuff. If he succeeds, he figures the beer-and-wine establishment will be serving an equal amount of each. Along with five keg wines and a vast wine-by-the-glass program, Glenville Stops will feature 20 beers on tap, including German and English selections.

The handmade bar is in the center of the space, which includes a dining area to the left and a large nook to the right for laid-back dining. Sketching out the restaurant's design was just one more task for the British-born Chapman, who earned his doctorate at Boston College, was an associate professor at Peking University in China and has written several books on U.S. foreign relations. Before even opening the restaurant, the multitasking owner earned the respect of his chef.

"Mike can tell you how many screws are in this place," Pedrosa quips. "Building a space out yourself is like a dying art. People don't do it anymore."

Q&A

HOME AGAIN

Boston welcomes back guitarist Joey Santiago and the rest of the Pixies on Jan. 18 at a sold-out Orpheum.

WHAT WAS IT LIKE CREATING NEW MATERIAL FOR THE FIRST TIME IN A LONG TIME? It's basically the same process. For me, I get chords and I play on top of the chords. That's all in my mind. I can't worry about anything else. So it sounds so boring, but that's just about it.

WERE YOU FOCUSED ON FANS AND HOW THEY'VE CHANGED OVER THE YEARS OR ON WHAT THE BAND WANTED TO DO? Oh, yeah, yeah, yeah. We discussed that. Are we going to please the curmudgeons, or are we going to try and woo in new fans? So we did both.

WHAT WAS BEHIND THE DECISION TO RELEASE MULTIPLE EPS WITHOUT ANY ADVANCE NOTICE? As far as announcing a release of a record, that's something new, but that's something I never really understand. Blah-biddy-blah is going to release this record two months from now. What am I going to do with that? Save money? Now you can just plop it out, it can drop out of the sky and there's no need to do that. LPs and designs of the full-length album, we just think that's a dying thing. And this way, the people can absorb the songs a little more.

AFTER KIM DEAL'S DEPARTURE, THE BAND SAID, "WE'LL ALWAYS CONSIDER HER A MEMBER OF THE PIXIES, AND HER PLACE WILL ALWAYS BE HERE FOR HER." IS THE BASSIST POSITION ALWAYS OPEN FOR HER RETURN? Yes, yes. It's just an open-door policy for her. Should she decide that she's at a festival and goes, "Hey, let's go do 'Gigantic,'" OK. Let's do it, but you gotta wait for the encore.

DO YOU HAVE A FAVORITE BOSTON SHOW THAT YOU'VE PLAYED? I would say the Rathskeller...It's like the equivalent of CBGB in Boston, and when we sold it out the first time it was pretty amazing. The line went around the corner of the street, moving up toward Fenway Park. So it was pretty cool, you know.

AND YOU SOLD OUT THE ORPHEUM FOR THE BOSTON HOMECOMING? Yes, uh huh. That would have felt really bad. The best show I saw there, by the way, was Public Enemy. It felt dangerous. I thought I was going to die. There were soldiers up front, and they would move at random moments but at the same time. What the f---, you know. It was just awesome. / Sarah Hagman HOME COOKING: A mother and-son team opened Bibim in the former home of Colo Restaurant.

Good Eats: A Cut Above

Kalguksoo, $9.50 at Bibim, 166 Harvard Ave., Allston (617-787-5656)

New year, new favorite noodle soup. At Bibim, the most recent (not to mention best-looking) addition to Allston's growing collection of Korean restaurants, the kalguksoo (literally "knife noodles") is hearty and satisfying as well as brothy and clean—ideal sustenance for these chilly post-holiday days when lighter eating is on the brain. Filling the faintly funky-sweet seafood broth are shucked clams, chunks of potato whose starch adds nice body to the broth, crisp-tender zucchini and the namesake knife-cut wheat noodles, which offer the density and chew of udon and the spring of ramen. / Elizabeth Bomze

DEM APPLES: Cider goodies from Western Mass.

Purveyors: Ciderhouse Rules

Jonathan Carr's formal training in agricultural science and pomology started bearing fruit in 2012. That's when he and his wife, Nicole, released the first bottles of hard cider through their Hadley-based business, Carr's Ciderhouse, after years of planning and planting. Now they not only brew a variety of sophisticated ciders and specialized products, like cider syrup—tangy with fig-like depth and sweetness—and ultra-fruity cider vinegar, but are also working on a grant-funded project to breed a new disease-resistant apple variety that's ideal for cider making. / Elizabeth Bomze

Drink of the Moment
TIGERS LOVE PEPPER, THEY HATE CINNAMON

PRICE: $10

INGREDIENTS: Maestro Dobel Diamond tequila, Sorel liqueur, apple cider, honey, cinnamon, cayenne pepper

INVENTOR: Jarek Mountain, Back Bay Harry's bar manager

SECRET: Ice is only added after mixing, so the honey can blend cleanly with the liquor.

TASTE: "I wanted a spicy fall cocktail," says Mountain, although it would be more apt to call it a winter warmer. Despite its clear color, the Maestro Dobel Diamond is a reposado, and its smokiness grounds the honey and cider. ("Most people go straight for the silver tequila," says Mountain, so he considers this a "gateway reposado.") Sorel, a mellow, hibiscus-flavored liqueur from Brooklyn, adds notes of clove and ginger, while the heat from the spices kicks in at the back.

DEPTH: Teeming with nuance, this drink makes an El Diablo margarita taste as complex as a vodka soda.

BACK BAY HARRY'S
142 Berkeley St., Boston (617-424-6711)
backbayharrys.com

PAIR IT WITH: Fried chicken with barbecue sauce would play well with the drink's sweet layers.

THE NAME: It's a line from the first Hangover movie, delivered by Zach Galifianakis while he's seasoning a roofied steak. All of Back Bay Harry's cocktails reference movies and television. Game of Thrones fans will appreciate The King of the North, a mix of Contratto Rosso vermouth, Lillet Rouge and slow-cooked, pecan-infused buttered rye whiskey. It's served with a big ice ball, representing the Wall. / Andrew Rimas

EXTRA BITE: Cinnamon and pepper add kick to this tequila drink.

WATCH ME FLY

A GRAPHIC NOVEL'S DOWN-TO-EARTH TAKE ON SUPERHEROISM

Starling* by Sage Stossel
Published by InkLit, 208 pages, $17.95 paperback
The author/artist lives in Cambridge.

STARLING IS NOT ENTIRELY A SUPERWOMAN. For one thing, the unexplained absences from the office resulting from her yellow-caped heroics are attributed to irritable bowel syndrome. Also, at times she champions questionable causes, like when she helps a homeless guy rob his cat back from a shelter.

Her mother—a nutty cat fanatic living in litter-box la la land—worked with chemicals while pregnant, so Starling's hands spark when her punch powers activate. But at work, she's besieged by co-worker Jason ("a weird mix of incompetent and calculating"), who's trying to steal her career glory. Xanax is gobbled; the shadow of procrastination lengthens. She's full of self-doubt.

Two guys—one an old almost-boyfriend, another a retired boxer with a protective bent—vie for Starling's affections. This ping-pong romance progresses suspensefully alongside her adventurous alternate life and her daily office politics.

Her powers twist and turn; she makes deals with a group of druggies and discovers that her ne'er-do-much brother is involved with them. But in a fantastic change of fate, he goes from loser to wild success. Stossel's drawings are so pleasingly clear that even in Starling's grungy encounters, the book looks sunny.

FROM INSIDE: "From the coffee shop I wandered through Riverbend Park. There I ditched the gun Rex's hit man had used on me. Then I ducked into a stall in the park bathroom and changed into my Starling outfit. I set off for the Norwood Museum with the painting tucked under my arm." ◆

Traveler's Checks

Last year's renovations encompassed the Great Cedar Hotel and Two Trees Inn, as well as a redesign of the resort's main corridors.

To further strain your credit, construction is underway on a new shopping outlet development.

The Escape Artist / Andrew Rimas

SILVER FOX

THE ORIGINAL CONNECTICUT CASINO UPS THE ANTE.

With apologies to Samuel Johnson, to be tired of humongous casinos is to be tired of life. They aren't always pretty. They can smell suspect, especially at three in the morning by the bingo hall. They can corrode the wallet and soul. But in the deeper gullies of the slot machine halls, under the hypnotic whir and burble, you'll witness what it truly means to be human. The activating agent, of course, is money. Money won, lost, charged, paid, celebrated, coveted and blown. Money, above all, dreamed.

Casinos, no less than investment banks, are masters in the uses, illusions and workings of money, which means that a good one knows precisely how to help you spend it. Foxwoods, the progenitor of New England gaming resorts, is to luxury expenditure what Noah's ark was to wildlife conservation. It may as well have invented the game, as you realize the moment you step out of the elevator onto the 22nd floor of the Grand Pequot Tower.

In a preemptive move against Massachusetts' gestating casinos, Foxwoods underwent a cosmetic purge. All the rooms in the Grand Pequot Tower are freshly remodeled, and it shows. Guided by your 24-hour on-call butler (no lowly concierge desks here), you approach your "villa" along long, marbled hallways that are surprisingly devoid of doors. That's because these suites span 1,400 square feet of polished opulence, so you have to hike to reach your room. Take a few moments to blink at the depth of the upholstery and the Jacuzzi, the Louis XIV palette and the view. Floor-to-ceiling windows frame a sea of trees. It's a deliberately aquiline effect. These rooms are meant to feel like a royal aerie in which high rollers roost and preen before swooping onto the poker tables. Pause to savor the dining room chandelier, the judicious placement of nut bowls, the marble bar. The temptation to linger is overwhelming, but if you have a southerly view, you might be able to look down through the glass ceiling of the pool at the hotel's Norwich Spa. This should be motivation to seek the elevator.

Along with the expected menu of pleasures—a top-notch hot-stone treatment, state-of-the-art fitness and wet areas—the 20,000-square-foot Norwich Spa offers a "Just for Him" package that includes a caviar facial and a gentleman's pedicure, along with a Swedish massage that excavates the most ossified knots in your spine. Afterward, re-tox with a cocktail on the indoor pool verandah before heading downstairs for playtime.

Lining the edges of the casinos, you'll find the expected train of boutiques—Bvlgari, Judith Ripka, Rolex. But it's more fun to explore the restaurants. The Scorpion Bar is one of the resort's most energetic nightspots, but in the afternoon it's an ideal pit-stop for a bucket of beer and an oversized nacho plate. The wrought-iron crosses and faux snakeskin bar stools give it a vaquero vibe. Go here to recharge from the slots. On the upper end, Paragon is an aptly named fine-dining restaurant at the top of the Grand Pequot Tower. Views are commanding, and dishes like the lobster tempura are more evolved than anything served up at the top of the Prudential. Go here if you win a jackpot.

If you brave the carpeted desert between the Grand Pequot and the MGM Grand—an airport expanse of Muzak, conveyor walkways and tourist scrums—you'll find Red Lantern, an expanded version of Boston's hip Asian eatery. In a casino, the restaurant's inflated Chinese vases and statuary feel perfectly in tune, as does the lapidary menu: miso sea bass that looks like the subject of a Dutch still life, rock shrimp that would give Nobu a run for its money, hamachi so pure that it glows. Even the lo mein with oyster sauce tastes rarified. As does the dry-aged beef at David Burke Prime, a celebrity-chef steakhouse that, astonishingly, delivers good service along with flourishes like a tableside-tossed Caesar salad and a crab Oscar top hat for your sirloin. Claim a back table under the pink rock-salt tiles and marvel at the three-story wine tower, or, even more impressive, sit with a view of the casino and witness the cavalcade.

And lest you're tempted to join in and risk a mauling on the Sex and the City-themed slot machine, remember that your villa awaits upstairs. Just call the butler to draw your Jacuzzi. ◆

COMFORT, ENJOY

A STALWART EXPANDS TO A NEIGHBORHOOD IN TRANSITION.

STEPHI'S IN SOUTHIE
130 Dorchester Ave., Boston (617-345-5495)
stephisinsouthie.com

GENTRIFICATION HAS BEEN CREEPING up on residential South Boston for years, but lately it looks to be galloping in. Suddenly, Broadway boasts hip clothing boutiques, a bagel joint, even (gasp) a Starbucks. Neighborhood dives like Aces High are giving way to cacophonous hotspots like Lincoln Tavern. Now comes Stephi's in Southie, the second sibling of venerable tourist-and-shopper stop Stephanie's on Newbury, settling amid new high-rise condos, pitching dishes like fancy meatloaf and simple roast chicken at near-fine-dining prices.

Odd as it sounds in 2014, upscale comfort food was a novelty when Stephanie's debuted 20 years ago, abetted by a prime people-watching location and patrons tired of artier culinary trends. To my surprise five years ago, Stephi's on Tremont made these qualities a success in the typically edgier South End. Can this formula, bolstered by some useful tweaks, work in the new South Boston? Steady crowds in its first months suggest so.

Longtime Stephanie's fans will welcome greatest hits like six entree-size salads topped with hunks of lean protein. I remain baffled that more restaurants don't offer such dishes to attract fitness-conscious diners the way Stephi's clearly does in droves. The renditions here are genuinely tasty and satisfying, like the crunchy vegetable salad ($13) of mandolined veggies with baby arugula, not overdressed with lemon vinaigrette, topped with chicken (for an extra $3), shrimp (+$6) or tuna (+$9). The Newbury Street chicken salad ($16) is another deserving favorite, about half a pulled roast chicken, beautifully moist, atop greens and tomatoes in a mayo dressing.

Appetizers include a pile of warm naan served with three firm, creamy dips ($12): white bean, sweetened ricotta and walnut-based muhammara, Americanized but delicious. As this is pizza-mad Southie, with three dozen pizza joints in three square miles, Stephi's offers crispy flatbread ($11): more of that excellent pulled chicken with pesto and fresh mozzarella atop a thin crust—pretty good.

Entrees include that fancy meatloaf ($18), the epitome of the format, a slab stuffed with cheddar, covered in salty mushroom gravy, flanked by butter-laden garlic mashed potatoes and butter-drenched haricots verts: the yin to a dinner salad's yang. The giant Stephi burger ($15) is similarly over-the-top in its flavors: sweet caramelized onions, salty bacon, umami-rich mushrooms and cheddar on a sweet brioche bun, plus a fistful of good fries. Have we seen this before? Endlessly. Is it good of its kind? Very.

More ambition shows in a couple of entrees, like lamb osso bucco ($24) over mascarpone polenta. Initially nonplussed by the tiny two-shank portion, I warmed to this dish: It's rich and fatty enough to be quite filling. Sides drench vegetables in something sweet or fatty, like roasted acorn squash ($8) with maple butter and cranberry marmalade, or the inevitable shaved Brussels sprouts ($8) larded with bacon. If you're feeling overwhelmed, consider the slow-roasted cauliflower ($8), which goes light on aioli and garners depth from smoked paprika. Or sit at one of the two bars and order bar snacks—simple, value-priced bites like a generous dish of Marcona almonds ($4), grill-charred shishito peppers ($4) and marinated olives with ricotta salata ($4).

The bar program hews to an increasingly dated but still popular approach: sweet-leaning specialty cocktails, free-poured and served in outsized portions, like Omar's Coming ($11): local gin, Aperol, St. Germain, lemon and a Champagne float. The wine program features a dozen respectable by-the-glass offerings ($8-$17), a couple of cheap-and-cheerful drafts ($8) and a nitrogen preservation system that enables any of 16 wines to be ordered in three-, six- or nine-ounce portions. Bottles include four sparklers ($36-$85), 22 whites ($24-$60), one rosé ($32), and 28 reds ($30-$115) with some remarkably gentle markups at the high end, like a 2009 Silver Oak Alexander Valley Cabernet Sauvignon ($95). Beers straddle the conventional/geeky divide—a pounder of PBR ($3) here, a bottle of Gritty McDuff's Pub-Style Pale Ale ($6) there—with a bias toward local brews.

Service is young, friendly and only moderately polished. The space is fashionably loud and gleams prettily with hard-edged decor. In many respects, it's a succinct encapsulation of what Southie's frenzied real-estate developers are doing at this moment: taking something old, slapping a slick veneer on it, and selling it to hordes of hungry young professionals at a nice markup. The neighborhood and its restaurants have a long way to go to reach 21st-century modernity. In the meantime, Stephi's in Southie seems neatly positioned to span the old and the new. ◆

AUGUST: OSAGE COUNTY ★★
Starring Meryl Streep, Julia Roberts, Juliette Lewis, Julianne Nicholson, and Chris Cooper. Screenplay by Tracy Letts. Directed by John Wells. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Movies / Sean Burns

BOOZY BONDS

MERYL STREEP TANKS IN JOHN WELLS' ADAPTATION OF AUGUST: OSAGE COUNTY.

Playwright Tracy Letts may have a shelf full of Tonys and a Pulitzer Prize, but that's no reason to pretend he's all respectable now.

This rotgut poet of the Plains kicked off his stage career with Killer Joe, an appallingly funny white-trash travesty that was adapted a couple of years back by William Friedkin into a monstrous little microbudget marvel. A key text in the recent Matthew McConaughey renaissance, Killer Joe made sure audiences would never eat fried chicken the same way again. Indeed, Letts and the Exorcist director share simpatico sensibilities, as their previous, too-little-seen 2006 collaboration, Bug, exhibited astonishing formal discipline in the service of auditorium-clearing shocks. (It's also the movie that unleashed Michael Shannon upon an unsuspecting world).

Sigh. What I wouldn't give to see a bare-bones Friedkin adaptation of August: Osage County. Letts' most-honored magnum opus is a cracker Eugene O'Neill riff hopped up on prescription meds and whiskey. It crams 10 or so members of the wildly dysfunctional Weston family into a sweltering, tiny space for all sorts of simultaneous outré revelations and profane recriminations. This literal hothouse ran for more than three hours every night on Broadway to both acclaim and exhaustion.

Awards have a way of ruining everything, and thus a severely truncated, flattened and defanged August: Osage County is now being presented to movie audiences with an all-star cast and a veneer of "prestige" as a collection of Academy-friendly "For Your Consideration" meltdown clips. Every ill-considered editing choice here bears the sticky fingerprints of statuette-grubbing producer Harvey Weinstein, attempting to tame this rough material for mass consumption by Oscar voters.

We begin with alcoholic has-been poet Beverly Weston (the delightful Sam Shepard) delivering a gorgeously discursive monologue about T.S. Eliot that segues into a description of his own drug-addled harridan wife. Beverly abruptly then goes and drowns himself just to get away from the bitch, a choice that becomes quite enviable once we finally meet her.

What played as a free-for-all cacophony upon the stage is flattened out by John Wells' pedestrian direction.

Violet Weston is a tyrannical gorgon in a chintzy wig and oversized sunglasses, slurring her words and picking fights with anybody unlucky enough to cross her path. She's played by Meryl Streep in one of the most grotesquely miscalculated drag-show performances I've ever seen. (Mommie Dearest's Faye Dunaway is no doubt breathing a sigh of relief right now.) Streep is so big and so bad, you'll wonder why they didn't just cast Melissa Leo instead.

The Weston daughters (Julia Roberts, Juliette Lewis and Julianne Nicholson—that's a lot of Julies) all descend with their extended broods for a doomed family funeral punctuated by blistering torrents of verbal abuse. What played as a free-for-all cacophony upon the stage is flattened out by John Wells' pedestrian direction. He tries to open up the play and give it room to breathe—a terrible choice.

Wells had a great run on television, shepherding ER and The West Wing through many years of rocky transitions. But his first feature, The Company Men, sanctified downsized one-percenters until Ben Affleck having to sell his Porsche was treated like one of the stations of the cross. Wells really has no idea what he's doing with August: Osage County, shooting in widescreen but still stubbornly sticking to close-ups and ignoring the crucial interplay amongst the ensemble. His camera is always in the wrong place.

Almost everyone not named Meryl Streep is pretty terrific in this picture (the only other exception being Benedict Cumberbatch, hilariously miscast as a hapless hayseed). But that hour and change shorn from Letts' original script leaves most of these performers scrambling to define their characters without the writer's ammunition. Most of this movie feels like it was left on the cutting room floor.

Yet Julia Roberts is fantastic. As the eldest Weston sister, Barbara, she's tougher than nails and falling apart. Roberts doesn't seem much interested in movies these days, and her best recent roles, like in Closer and Duplicity, have found her playing into a brittle, flagrantly unlikable part of her personality that's a far cry from her decades-long run as America's sweetheart. Turns out Pretty Woman can wield the F-word like a dagger, and I really enjoy that.

August: Osage County is, at heart, a horror story about Roberts realizing that she's already turned into her awful mother. But unlike the play, the movie tacks on a wordless, ghastly redemption scene that looks like a Jeep commercial. Complete with an awful Kings of Leon song, it's a wretched betrayal of the rest of the story, reassuring us that everything is now somehow going to be OK. (Puke.)

I'm not sure why anybody would take on this kind of material and then not see it all the way through. But then as Barbara says: "Good thing we can't tell the future. We'd never get out of bed." ◆ plays House of Blues on Jan. 18.

TROMBONE SHORTY

Music / Paul Robicheau

STANDING TALL

TROY ANDREWS CREDITS NEW ORLEANS MENTORS FOR FUELING HIS OWN MISSION.

WALKING TO GRADE SCHOOL IN THE historic Treme neighborhood of New Orleans, Troy "Trombone Shorty" Andrews would see one brass band at a funeral, then another at a birthday party on his way home.

"It was like a dream place," says Andrews, who got to hang around local legends like Kermit Ruffins and the Dirty Dozen and Rebirth brass bands that grew out of the city's second-line social traditions. "Right now, it's nowhere near what it was. I'm used to people dancing and jumping on cars and second-lining. That's the type of music I grew up playing and listening to. We were just bringing joy."

Now, as Trombone Shorty (a moniker he carned by playing his horn in that neighborhood since age 4), the 28-year-old Andrews brings joy in his own role of musical ambassador, performing what he calls "supafunkrock" with his world-trekking band, Orleans Avenue.

"If we did what everyone's been doing for 50 years, the music would never grow," Andrews says, acknowledging that some old-timers weren't so supportive of his rocking funk but have since come around. "They see, 'OK, y'all doing something that might not be what we thought y'all be doing, but y'all doing something that's actually helping everybody.'"

Trombone Shorty has topped the contemporary jazz charts and played late-night TV shows, the White House and even the closing slot at last year's New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival in place of the Neville Brothers.

"I don't think genres really exist in New Orleans—it's just New Orleans music," says Andrews, whose group hits House of Blues on Jan. 18. "As a kid, growing up and being able to share the stage with the Neville Brothers, Dr. John and some of the Marsalis family, and even working with Mannie Fresh as a teenager on some hip-hop things, I always thought that was normal. Music is music."

As he got older, Andrews learned something else. "New Orleans never forgot that jazz music was dance music," he says. "There's a certain bounce to the music and a beat that you have to get up and dance."

"If we did what everyone's been doing for 50 years, the music would never grow."

For his slick, robust album Say That to Say This, released in September, Andrews tapped R&B iconoclast Raphael Saadiq, whose former group Tony! Toni! Tone! had influenced the young horn player.

"What I love about him," Andrews says, "is the knowledge of the music that came before him and his imagination on how to push it forward." He says that Saadiq influenced the writing for the album, adding unusual chord changes on guitar in jams with Orleans Avenue, which features guitarist Pete Murano, saxophonists Tim McFatter and Dan Oestreicher, bassist Mike Ballard and drummer Joey Peebles as well as Andrews.

In addition to his work on trombone and trumpet, Andrews shows his development as a vocalist on assertive tracks like "You and I (Outta This Place)" and "Fire and Brimstone." "In my early years, I wouldn't even speak on the mic," he says. "If you're the leader of a band in New Orleans, you have to sing and you have to entertain, and that comes from the model that Louis Armstrong left for us."

Andrews also takes pride in his attention to songwriting and arranging, giving credit to Allen Toussaint as a mentor and noting that it's helped him in collaborations with the Dave Matthews Band and the Zac Brown Band.

He continually cites New Orleans musicians who nurtured him, including family members, led by his trumpeter brother James. "They didn't treat me like a kid when it came to music," Andrews says. "Only when I took the horn out of my mouth, then they'd say, 'OK, we got to get you home. You have homework to do.'"

Andrews even convinced the original Meters to reunite in a studio for the first time since 1977 to recut "Be My Lady" for his new album. "They're like my uncles," he says. "I didn't know how deep it would be."

He gives back as well through his Trombone Shorty Foundation and Music Academy, housed at Tulane University and providing lessons as well as instruments to city youngsters. "I just wanted them to see that music could be their passports to see the world." ◆

FLAGGED FOR APPROVAL

THE CRAIGSLIST AD THAT WON THE INTERNET

Most people who go to Craigslist are not in search of literary stimulation. Other kinds of stimulation, for sure, but the average Craigslist ad reads like an indictment of the American educational system. Spelling errors, grammatical gaffes, use of the word "prolly"—Craigslist is a foul sewer of linguistic offal, where full sentences go to score some krokodil and hit rock bottom. If people write the way they talk, then Craigslist says we talk reel dum.

However, there is a genre of Craigslist ad that strives for something higher, something beyond mere lucid communication. There are, believe it or not, Craigslist ads that are fun to read. They're compiled in a section called "Best of Craigslist." So when I needed to sell a set of wheels from my Bronco, I decided to aim high with my listing. I wouldn't just sell my wheels. I'd join the Best of Craigslist.

After way too much effort, my chef d'oeuvre was ready to post. I'd done research on the SR-71 Blackbird program, the Buddhist concept of renunciation, the International Olympic Committee, calf implants, the Rolling Stones' 1989 album Steel Wheels and the trigonometry of circles. I double-checked that the southern terminus of the Red Line is either Ashmont or Braintree, which was relevant to a digression about G-suits and space planes. I made sure that I spelled Thomas Kinkade's name correctly. There would be no Craigslist sloppiness here.

I imagined I'd write a tight paragraph and call it a day, but the end product spanned more than 700 words and included four photos—three of the wheels and one of Kim Jong Un on a roller coaster, a reference to a section involving metallurgy and tensions in the South China Sea. Sample sentence: "Forged in the belching foundries of darkest Pittsburgh, these wheels were hammered into form by taciturn, sooty-faced craftsmen whose gnarled hands reshaped ore first hewn from the rugged fjords of Scandinavia by murderous Vikings." I prolly went a little overboard.

I posted the listing—four wheels for $80, which is a pretty solid deal if you ask me—and then put the link on Facebook and Twitter. Soon the listing was picked up by several websites, including Yahoo Autos. I know from experience that if Yahoo commenters got the first look at the Mona Lisa, they'd say, "Did a blind guy paint this ugly dude?" and "I want my 10 seconds back." The first comment on my wheels, however, reads, "Slight grin." Slight grin! By the standards of Yahoo comments, that's like a restaurant getting three Michelin stars or Simon Cowell handing a record deal to a karaoke singer. One Twitter user opined, "Greatest Craigslist ad of all time? Perhaps."

The rest of my day was consumed with responding to feedback on the wheels. Via Twitter, I was asked, "Would you consider an even trade for a pair of 'mom' jeans said to be worn by Susan Sarandon in Lorenzo's Oil?" Well, of course. On Facebook, a friend of mine asserted, "I think you overshot your audience. Just a bit, yes." Of course there were facetious offers involving Western Union money transfers and international shipping. What I did not get, at all, were any actual offers to buy the wheels.

Thus I was overjoyed to find a message in my inbox that responded to the actual ad. When I opened it, though, it read, "That is one of the most badass Craigslist postings ever! Well done. If I lived closer, I'd be a buyer! The Wu Tang reference killed me." I was beginning to wonder if anybody believed I actually had anything to sell, or if the wheels were merely my Craigslist muse, my excuse to write things like, "You don't mount tires on these wheels. These wheels mount your tires."

Finally, I got a message with a phone number from a real person interested in the wheels. We texted back and forth, and it turned out they wouldn't fit his truck. That, it transpired, would be the only authentic inquiry I'd receive, because that night Craigslist deleted my ad. I'm guessing the problem was the Kim Jong Un photo, which I pulled from Google Images and might've been copyrighted. I don't know how you get non-copyrighted photos from North Korea, unless you're friends with Dennis Rodman.

So the bottom line is, I still have the wheels. A friend of mine helped edit the ad to conform to Craigslist expectations, so the next time I post, it'll read, "wheels, black will fit ford trucks or maybe somthing els??????? Call or txt $80 no scammers."

Perhaps my Best of Craigslist ambitions didn't get rid of my wheels, but my moment of Internet fame did teach me that you can't sell Breaking Bad to a Duck Dynasty world. The medium is the message, and the message is dum. ◆

FLASH BACK

A SHUTTERBUG SHARES OUTTAKES FROM HIS STORIED CAREER.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD–BASED PHOTOGRAPHER PETER Simon, 66, recently released a DVD, Through the Lens, chronicling his 50-year career. Raised in New York, he's the son of the founder of publishing giant Simon and Schuster, while one of his three sisters, Carly, has enjoyed an illustrious career as a singer-songwriter. He's worked as a photojournalist, covering everything from the free-love movement of the '60s to reggae concerts to Mets' games, and has authored numerous books in addition to a popular series of calendars. He and his wife, Ronni, live on Martha's Vineyard, where they operate the Simon Gallery. A retrospective of his iconic rock-'n'-roll photography can currently be seen at the John Varvatos boutique in Copley Place.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Favorite image of yours?

PETER SIMON: There are two that I'd mention. One was taken in Washington, D.C., in 1969 of a whole crowd of people demonstrating against the war in Vietnam. It's called "D.C. Mobilization Day," and there's a big crowd, with the Washington Monument in the background and big cumulus clouds that look quite ominous. It was very surreal. We were all students, and we were terrified of having to fight this war. Our lives were at stake. So politically, that's my favorite. Then, there's the other phase of my work that really began when I moved full time to Martha's Vineyard. It's a photograph of a long and winding road with wisteria arched over it, called "Wisteria Road." It's hand-colored by my wife, Ronni. It's extremely pastoral. You just want to walk down this road forever.

One thing all great photos have in common? On my DVD, I mention 10, but I can summarize by saying technically you want it to be well-focused, well-exposed and well-composed. You want it to tell a story. You want it to have a point of view. You want to show something that people might not have seen before, and you want a timeless quality, so that in 50 years, the picture will still have lasting interest or value.

What's the hardest thing to shoot? A baseball game. It might sound stupid, but I covered the Mets for a number of years, and it's just impossible to know where the ball's going to go. You wind up taking a lot of pictures of batters swinging or pitchers throwing, and there's nothing special about that, so you just have to hope that something great like a collision or someone stealing third is going to happen. It's utterly unpredictable.

Ever make the rookie mistakes of forgetting to take off the lens cap or put in film or a media card? Well, I learned an object lesson from my father, who was an amateur photographer. He loved photography, and he had the occasion to film Albert Einstein once. When he got back home, he opened his camera, and he'd forgotten to put in film. That taught me to be really careful. But one time, I went to Montreal to photograph a folk concert with Buffy Sainte-Marie and Arlo Guthrie and Gordon Lightfoot and Neil Young. I put all my film in the pocket of my sports jacket. We stopped at a Howard Johnson's on the Mass. Pike on our way back, and I left the jacket there. I never saw the jacket or the film again.

"I've always felt that the camera brings me into an experience even more, because I examine it more, observe it more."

Is using a camera a way of distancing yourself from whatever you're shooting? For me, the camera does not take me away from what's going on. I'm sure it's different for other people, but I've always felt that the camera brings me into an experience even more, because I examine it more, observe it more.

There's been this incredible proliferation of selfies... I'll say.

What advice do you give people photographing themselves? The camera does so much for you now. But when I teach, one of the things I emphasize is to get rid of distracting things in the background or irrelevant bits of the image. You don't want an Exit sign behind you. You also need good lighting. I emphasize using back-lighting, if you can.

How do you feel about apps like Instagram and Camera Plus that sort of take the skill out of taking a photo? Well, I tend to take those pictures less seriously. It may be digitally interesting, but photographs that are highly manipulated are just sort of visual clutter, because we're bombarded by so much imagery. Of course, I manipulate images, but I try to keep it to a minimum.

Do you like seeing photos of yourself? It's funny. There was one in The Globe last week, and I didn't think I looked great. As I age, I don't expect to look as good as I did when I was younger, but I was never a terribly good-looking person to begin with. My wife has said to me on many occasions, "I didn't marry you for your looks."

Is eyesight your keenest sense? It's the one I've developed the most. But hearing is huge, too, because I'm a music fanatic. I have ringing in the ears from all the concerts and DJing at clubs. I used to spin dance music in the '70s and '80s, and I didn't know not to expose my ears to loud sound. I've had ringing in my ears since the late '80s. It's awful.

Best concert you ever went to? The one that stands out in my mind is when Carly [Simon] and James [Taylor] reunited on the Vineyard in '95. It was called Livestock '95, and it raised money for the Ag Hall. They were both at the top of their form, and it was very emotional because they sang together for the first time since their marriage broke up. It was just a magical night.

Hardest musician to photograph? Well, the Grateful Dead hated to pose. They were hard to get a group shot of, although they were really great and easy to shoot onstage.

Anyone who intimidated you? I'd say Dylan. He's not a particularly warm and friendly guy. He's a little prickly. I don't think he likes to be photographed.

Anyone you'd want to photograph but haven't? Well, I've always wanted to do the Obamas, especially on the beach on Martha's Vineyard. ◆

Burn Notice

We step out of our comfort zones with five unique workouts.

NOVEMBER PROJECT

BY Hannah Sheinberg

I'm a Florida transplant who prefers pointe shoes to Pumas. I enjoy waking up around lunchtime. November Project, founded by two former members of the Northeastern crew team, is a grass-roots phenomenon whereby participants get up in the middle of the night (OK, 6:30 am), indifferent to the New England weather conditions, and try to conquer a workout. On Wednesdays, this means the concrete steps of Harvard Stadium in Allston. Obviously, we don't seem like a perfect match.

Nonetheless, my morning begins with me shivering under the stadium entrance in a cotton pajama top, since I don't own any long-sleeve workout shirts. The pros start to race up the steps, while the newbies stand in a dark corner exchanging free hugs as instructed. I suspect this may turn out to be my favorite part, mostly for the body warmth.

After the lovefest ends, I stand at the bottom of the stadium's asthma-inducing steps. Regulars usually climb up and down the entire 37-section stadium, while beginners are expected to finish 19 sections. Basically, we're jogging up mini mountains to jump-start our morning. I go in thinking I'm prepared, since my apartment is a third-floor walk-up. So on my first section, I sprint up past the marathoners and Runner's World cover models, feeling like I just won American Gladiators.

By the third section, I feel the need to keep repeating aloud that I'm going to puke. I even attempt to lie down on the cold cement, hoping that none of the 400 other attendees notice—but the fact that I'm accompanied by a photographer, who's now doubling as my motivational coach, doesn't exactly help me blend in. I only make it through a whopping nine sections in one hour, learning that you're supposed to pace yourself. But as a bonus point, I never actually end up vomiting, though my legs are such mush that I may resort to racing old ladies for a seat on the T.

Unfortunately for me, November Project likes to go online to publicly shame members who miss sessions. They've already tweeted at me to come again, so I may have to go into hiding, or finally purchase proper winter workout attire. ◆

November Project meets on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays at various locations.

PILOXING

BY Matt Martinelli

My comfort zone ends at any exercise that doesn't include sitting on a stationary bike beside people reading the newspaper. Piloxing, taught by Ali Baldassare at Beacon Hill Athletic Club in the North End, is far outside that zone, with its combination of pilates, boxing, dancing and rhythm. Rocky marathons notwithstanding, none of those elements are familiar—especially not the rhythm part.

Fifteen women and I are in a mirrored studio with music set to blare for 60 minutes of action. The first move is to the left, but I'm out of step almost immediately. We're moving in an eight-count. You would think that would make me right once every eight times. You'd be wrong.

After three minutes, we start jumping jacks. I'm out of rhythm, but I complete the moves. We shift to push-ups, also doable. I still have a chance to salvage this, but my optimism vanishes when we strike ballet poses. Ali yells out: "Both arms in the air, right leg up and bent toward your left knee." Then it's Superman poses with arms straight ahead. I'm like Jimmy Olsen, surrounded by Wonder Women. Every time Ali shouts, "Hold that pose," my leg touches the ground, reflexively doing the opposite. But by the eighth time, I do actually hold it.

Next, we're boxing: Punch to the right, to the left—only I go right when everyone goes left. I almost connect a direct hit with Ali. Two punches later, she nearly hits me in the face. I dig deep for every Rocky move I remember, tuning out the whirl of the workout. I imagine the ringside announcer: "And now, the heavyweight champion of the wooooooooorld!" Ten seconds later, I'm out of rhythm and three inches from connecting a punch. We're only 15 minutes into class.

More ballet poses, boxing, stretching and falling out of rhythm follow. For the final 20 minutes, we're on mats, which is slightly easier. The end is in sight, but the final five minutes require crunches...while doing scissor kicks...while rotating left and right. My feet flail wildly. I look around to see 15 women, at ease with this challenging workout, and I can almost hear the Rocky announcer: "And now, the worst piloxer in the history of the wooooooooorld!" ◆

KUNDALINI YOGA

BY Jacqueline Houton

Kundalini yoga is offered at Kundalini Yoga Boston. 186 Hampshire St., Cambridge (617-868-0055) kundaliniyogaboston.com

As an erstwhile psych major and daughter of a psychiatrist, I'm way more at home with talk of neurotransmitters than of chakras.

So it's with slight trepidation that I lug my long-neglected mat to Kundalini Yoga Boston in Inman Square. My yoga exposure amounts to little more than a college course taken for my Phys. Ed. requirement, conducted in a mustily carpeted annex with more focus on the physical than the metaphysical. But the latter gets plenty of play at this studio, home to classes like "The Art of Self Elevation" and "Kundalini Yoga for Love and Prosperity." Known as the "yoga of awareness," Kundalini yoga pairs kriyas (sequences of poses) with breath work to awaken latent energy, often depicted as a serpent coiled at the base of the spine. This is far crunchier fare than I'm used to, but perhaps it'll soothe the weird neck ache I woke up with this morning.

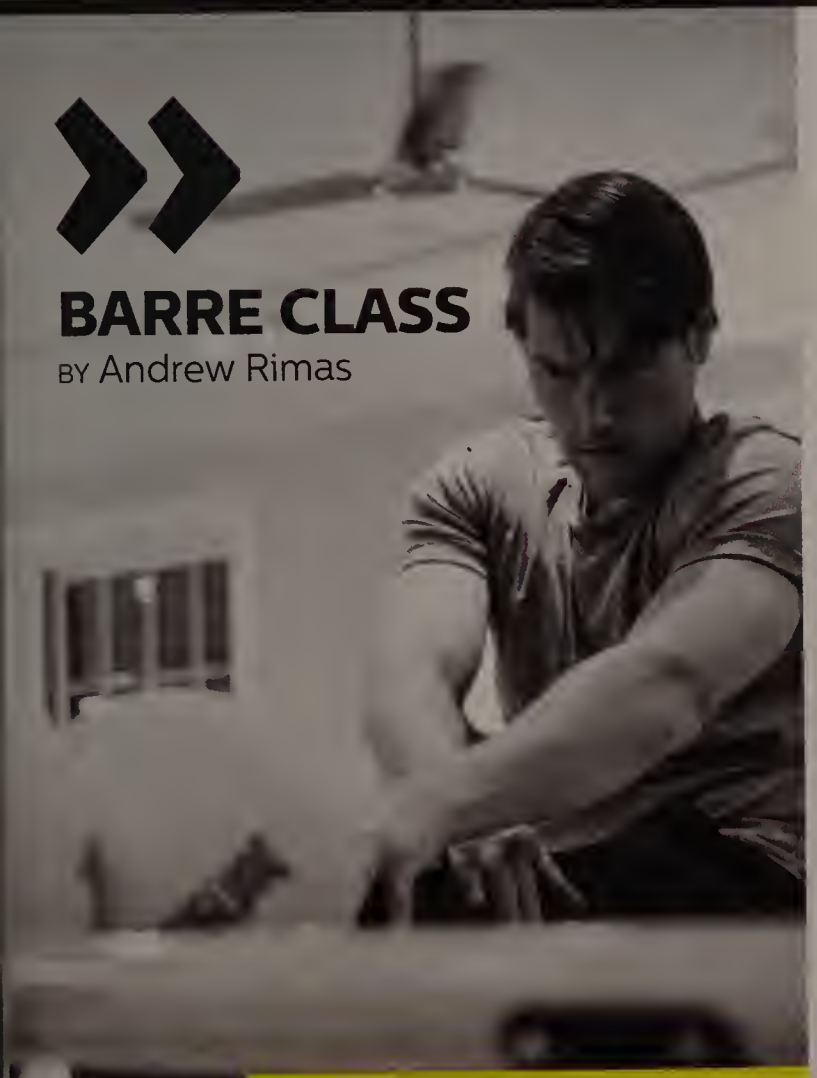
Arriving for the 90-minute class "Power Kundalini Yoga and Gong," I receive a warm welcome from owners Siri Bani Kaur and Siri Ram Kaur Khalsa, both outfitted in flowing white raiment, turbans and dangling earrings that catch the sunlight sifting through the cozy studio's outsized windows. The garb is meant to attract radiant energy, a similarly attired attendee says, which might flummox me more if they didn't, in fact, look so darn radiant.

Siri Bani Kaur—also known as Cindy Ludlam, an artist and art educator as well as a certified Kundalini instructor—starts class with spine-stretching warm-ups and a mantra: "Ong namo guru dev namo," meaning "I call upon divine wisdom." As a bonus mantra, I go with "Embrace the ridiculous," advice from a smiling classmate that comes in handy during Breath of Fire, a nasal-breathing technique that on me sounds like Breath of Hyperventilating Warthog.

Kriyas go surprisingly quickly (except for one deceptively simple pose that leaves my outstretched arms feeling like lead). Then comes meditation with that eponymous gong. As a tightly wound Type A, I've never been good at quieting my mind, but focusing on the sound—booming one moment and shimmering delicately the next, more like a symphony than a single instrument—helps me shush it a bit. By the time we sing the closing blessing (or mouth along in my case), that neck pain that'd made turning my head nearly impossible this morning has dissolved. Not enough to make me a believer quite yet, but I can see why Gisele's a fan. And who knows? I might even sing along next time. ◆

BARRE CLASS

BY Andrew Rimas



Barre classes are offered at the Bar Method. 234 Clarendon St., Boston (617-236-4455) boston.barmethod.com

On the subject of exercise, I'm an anti-Benthamite: Only through the most excruciating pain can we achieve the greatest good.

That's why my customary workouts involve abusing my triceps with metal weights and running until my lungs feel like they've been put through a cheese grater. It never occurred to me that squeezing a smallish volleyball between my thighs could bring to mind one of the stations of the cross, but the Bar Method upset a lot of my expectations. The first of which was that this is a workout for girls.

Although, honestly, it is. When I walked into the Bar Method's clean, bright reception area above Clarendon Street, a dozen women looked at me with approving, slightly inquisitive smiles. I changed in what seemed like an underutilized men's locker room before staking out a corner of a ballet studio softened with plush, spongy carpeting. I was the only man in a class of about 20 students, led by co-owner McKenzie Howarth, who cuts the ideal figure of a sculpted motivational leader. A leader who will make your calf muscles shake like they've come off a weeklong bender in Vegas.

"We work muscles to the point of fatigue and target one muscle group at a time, then move on to the next group," McKenzie explains. "The result is that each muscle group is exhausted."

Starting with a series of leg and arm lifts, we move to plank position before a bout of weight-hoisting. The guiding principles are repetition, correct posture and mercilessness. Within five minutes, I find myself straining my deltoids in a position reminiscent of a mime imitating a speed skater, but events take a truly savage turn when we stretch our legs on the barre. Turns out, my limbs are as flexible as basalt. When we strike second position—feet splayed, one hand aloft—and repeatedly raise ourselves on our toes, my legs start to revolt. This isn't a sweaty, panting workout, but it's the only time I've ever seen my quads behave as if they've received 50,000 volts.

At the end of the hour, my abdominals feel like they've been shorn off. Even my pecs—normally a subject of minor pride—hate me. As we're putting away our mats, one of my classmates assures me that I'll be feeling the aftershocks later that night. This may be a workout for girls, but it's decidedly not for sissies. ◆

ANIMAL FLOW

BY Sarah Hagman

131 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-578-8918) equinox.com

I'm not one to normally venture into the unknown. I research, I plan, I prepare accordingly. But Animal Flow is its own beast. A rare hybrid of Parkour, break dancing, gymnastics and a host of other activities (including circus feats), it's not something I could grasp from the description alone. The class's promo video features the program's shirtless inventor skittering through a forest, which only leaves me further wondering what I'm getting into. It also prompts more than one person from my office to ask me where they'd hold a class that requires swinging branches and fallen trees.

That would be at the Dartmouth Street location of Equinox. With instructor Todd Skoglund leading the pack, Animal Flow is a new concept in the ever-evolving world of group exercise—although it might be said to be an evolutionary step backward, as it's purportedly designed around the way our bodies are built, and how humans began walking on two legs six million years ago. Prepare to be low to the ground, on all fours and occasionally upside-down for a good portion of the 45 minutes.

I become very familiar with the ape pose, a killer low squat that burns the thigh muscles, yet is considered the "resting" position that students return to again and again. Between trying to remember what it feels like to have sensation in my legs and realizing I'm in desperate need of a pedicure—note that I had to take the class barefoot—I attempt to concentrate long enough to learn the individual poses. Beast, crab, scorpion. I literally am out on a limb here, alternating and then simultaneously raising arms or legs or both an inch off the ground. It's hard to think of any other instance when it hurts so much to move so little. After incorporating conditioning workouts into each animal's stance, I (try to) transition from pose to pose in a yoga-like fashion as Todd calls them out. The session is normally capped off by moving in a herd together, but we run out of time—though I suspect you'd need to watch out for errant legs from people, like myself, who temporarily forget the difference between their right and left when under physical duress.

I leave the session wondering just how athletic our fellow primates are. Scientists generally say they're twice as strong as we are. That makes sense now. But at least I can use my opposable thumbs to schedule a pedicure. ◆

SHEA ROSE

Singer-songwriter Shea Rose says the secret to her regimen, on or off stage, is "keep it simple, fresh and striking." A Berklee alum who blends hip-hop, rock, soul and R&B, she once served as a CoverGirl spokesmodel for a special campaign, but says, "I try not to overdo it with product, makeup or accessories, but make choices that accent and highlight what nature's given me." One very personal accent in her travel bag is a gift from her brother: a pair of Women's Barefoot Shoes by Vibram FiveFingers. "Flexible and easy to store in a carry-on or purse," Rose says, "and a great conversation piece."

BIANCA DE LA GARZA

"I live in a world of high definition," says WCVB-TV newscaster Bianca de la Garza, leaving "no room for error" in a 20-minute makeup routine that begins at 4 am. She relies on "good concealer so I don't look puffy or tired" and "a smile, which is always the best accessory, no matter what color lipstick you wear." De la Garza notes that makeup is part of her line of work, even for men. "That said, I don't parade around in it on my days off. Weekends [mean] lipstick and bronzer, which I skip if I've been diligent with my self-tanner," she says. "TV makeup is an art, and the good makeup artists are like Michelangelo. Me? At 4 am doing my own makeup, it's about avoiding looking like a Jackson Pollock piece."

GREGORY BALLA

It takes 30 minutes and a wardrobe assistant's help for Blue Man troupe member Gregory Balla to achieve his signature look. "The process is a nice time to transform myself physically and mentally into the character," says Balla, who appears sans blue in occasional productions with the Lyric Stage and Huntington Theatre companies. Removing all that greasepaint is a process, too. "I also have sensitive skin," he says, "so I need products that don't contain fragrances and perfumes." In winter, Balla liberally applies moisturizer after his shows. "If I leave the warm, moist theater and head out into the cold Boston air, my skin will dry out immediately, especially where the bald cap has been glued down around my neck and face. A great moisturizer calms the irritation and keeps me from getting a dried-out 'cap line.' "

LINDSAY BUCHHOLZ

"A good cleanser, exfoliant and moisturizer" are essentials for Lindsay Buchholz, wife of Red Sox pitcher Clay Buchholz. The former host of HDNet travel show Get Out is still a jet-setter—and she prioritizes skin care during her family's frequent travels. "I also like to use serums for the added antioxidants, and I love how they make my skin glow," she says. "I've been using Epicuren products since my modeling days and get great results. I recently started incorporating Environ products—a Vitamin C- and A-based line—into my regimen and feel like it helps replenish my skin with nutrients that are lost while nursing," adds the mom of two little girls.

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Hannah Sheinberg

GOOD IN THE HOOD In David Farr's rendition of a classic tale, The Heart of Robin Hood, the leading man and his Merry Men steal from the rich, but do not give to the poor. Instead of a band of brothers saving the less fortunate in form-fitting tights, Robin and his crew are savages who live in the forest and wear lots of leather. Marion, formerly a damsel in distress, becomes the heroine in this adaptation, trying to transform Robin Hood into a kind-hearted hero who can save the poor from the greedy Prince John. With roots band Poor Old Shine's live accompaniment and the forest dwellers' high-flying acrobatics, this version of Robin Hood from the American Repertory Theater is sure to steal the show through Jan. 19 at Loeb Drama Center. Coryn Doncaster

ON A PEDESTAL Artists don't get much more tortured than sculptor Camille Claudel. In Bruno Dumont's biopic Camille Claudel 1915, Juliette Binoche plays the turn-of-the-century artist, the lover of Auguste Rodin and a blazing talent in her own right. After their tumultuous relationship ends, Claudel begins destroying her own work and accusing Rodin of ruining her career. The French film follows her struggle to survive in the asylum where she was confined by her family for 30 years, despite doctors' assertions that she was sane. Reviews by Sean Burns

12 YEARS A SLAVE ★★★★ Despite being adapted by screenwriter John Ridley from Solomon Northup's own 1853 memoir, the astonishing 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have seen movies about the horrors of slavery before. But this one is about the mechanics. It is about process. Director Steve McQueen actually downplays the brutality of plantation life, all things considered. 12 Years a Slave merely asks you to meet its level gaze and accept the fact that all this actually happened. Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this cruel and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? Don't look away. (In the suburbs.)

20 FEET FROM STARDOM ★★★★ You sing along with them on the radio all the time, but I bet you've never even heard of these ladies. Morgan Neville's jubilant, long-overdue documentary moves the spotlight from center stage to the unheralded backup singers who have anonymously contributed to our pop-culture consciousness for the past 50-odd years. Darlene Love, whose voice defined Phil Spector's Wall of Sound, was taken advantage of by Spector's shockingly petty (and seemingly criminal) attempts to deny her recognition. Watch out for Merry Clayton, who showed up in a bathrobe with rollers in her hair in the middle of the night to wail on "Gimme Shelter" when the Stones were stuck in a rut. (The shot of Mick Jagger listening to her isolated vocal track is alone worth the price of admission.) Their stories are sad, as showbiz tales often are. But this funny, raucous party of a movie is a celebration, not just of wonderful music but of finally giving credit where it's due. (At West Newton.)

ANCHORMAN 2: THE LEGEND CONTINUES ★★ Aren't comedy sequels the worst? Since you liked all those jokes the first time around, why not hear them again? Much in the way that increasingly diminished returns squashed whatever fond memories we had of the first Austin Powers and Hangover pictures, Will Ferrell and co-writer/director Adam McKay trot out numbskull newscaster Ron Burgundy for a victory lap through all those old quotes that obnoxious drunk people have been shouting at you in bars ever since the underperforming 2004 original became a cult hit. There's a nifty satirical idea here, as our moron correspondent decides that the news is too boring and sets the template for 24-hour cable stations by focusing exclusively on car chases, pets and empty patriotic slogans. Unfortunately, like every other idea in the movie, it's woefully underdeveloped, leaving the unseemly 112-minute running time to be padded out with non sequiturs and unstructured improv sessions that go nowhere. Top-heavy with pointless celebrity cameos, Anchorman 2 mistakes recognition for humor. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

AMERICAN HUSTLE ★ 1/2 A gaudy spectacle of egregious overacting and silly wig humor, writer-director David O. Russell's indulgent riff on the FBI's "Abscam" sting operation is the year's biggest embarrassment. Christian Bale hems, haws and makes a lot of De Niro faces as a con-artist dry-cleaning magnate suckered by Bradley Cooper's overzealous agent into setting up a crooked New Jersey mayor (Jeremy Renner). With the overlapping narration tracks, freeze frames, classic-rock soundtrack and cascading camera moves, Russell proves that not only has he seen Goodfellas and Casino, but that he liked them an awful lot. The ins and outs of the grifts aren't particularly interesting, so American Hustle ramps up a contrived love story with Bale and Cooper bickering for the affections of Amy Adams' duplicitous bad girl, who adopts a phony British accent and refuses to wear bras. Jennifer Lawrence eats scenery as Bale's harpy wife, once again stuck in a part for which she is at least 10 years too young. Everybody's miscast and overcompensating, while Russell's directorial karaoke comes off as Scorsese for dummies. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

THE GREAT BEAUTY ★★★★ A monumental act of hubris even more impressive for being pulled off so gloriously, director Paolo Sorrentino's dazzling fantasia serves as a sort-of sequel to Federico Fellini's La Dolce Vita, one of the greatest of all films. Sad-eyed Toni Servillo stars as Jep Gambardella, a one-time novelist and dapper darling of Rome's social scene who has drifted through the past four decades in a haze of beautiful women, extravagant luxury and killer parties. But Jep's 65th birthday has knocked our old hedonist for a loop, and suddenly the sweet life ain't what it used to be. Sorrentino appropriates Fellini's rambling, anecdotal structure and pet obsessions: plenty of curvy ladies, circuses and juxtapositions of the sacred with the profane. But The Great Beauty is more than mere homage. Filtered through the filmmaker's own specific sensibility, it's a richly symbolic meditation on mortality, aging and precious time wasted. Servillo's weary gaze carries in it an existential ache for all that might have been, and a sad acknowledgement that every party eventually must end. Bravo. (At Coolidge.)

GRUDGE MATCH ★★ 1/2 I'm not sure anybody ever really wondered what might happen if Rocky Balboa fought Jake LaMotta. The winner of the Cold War vs. cinema's most inarticulate wife beater hardly seems like a selling point, save that Sylvester Stallone and Robert De Niro both played boxers a long time ago and have seen better days, career-wise. This mediocre time killer casts the two raging prunes as septuagenarian rivals encouraged to put the gloves on again after a public scuffle goes viral on YouTube. When they last faced off in 1997's Cop Land, Stallone improbably acted circles around De Niro, coming in underneath the latter's broad, jokey performance with a genuinely affecting sweetness. The same thing happens again here, as the two vie for the affections of a shockingly well-preserved Kim Basinger. Alan Arkin is on hand to run through his patented profane grandpa routine, while Kevin Hart keeps the energy up with a volley of obvious ad-libs. Grudge Match isn't much of a movie, but you can do worse. Both of these stars certainly have. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

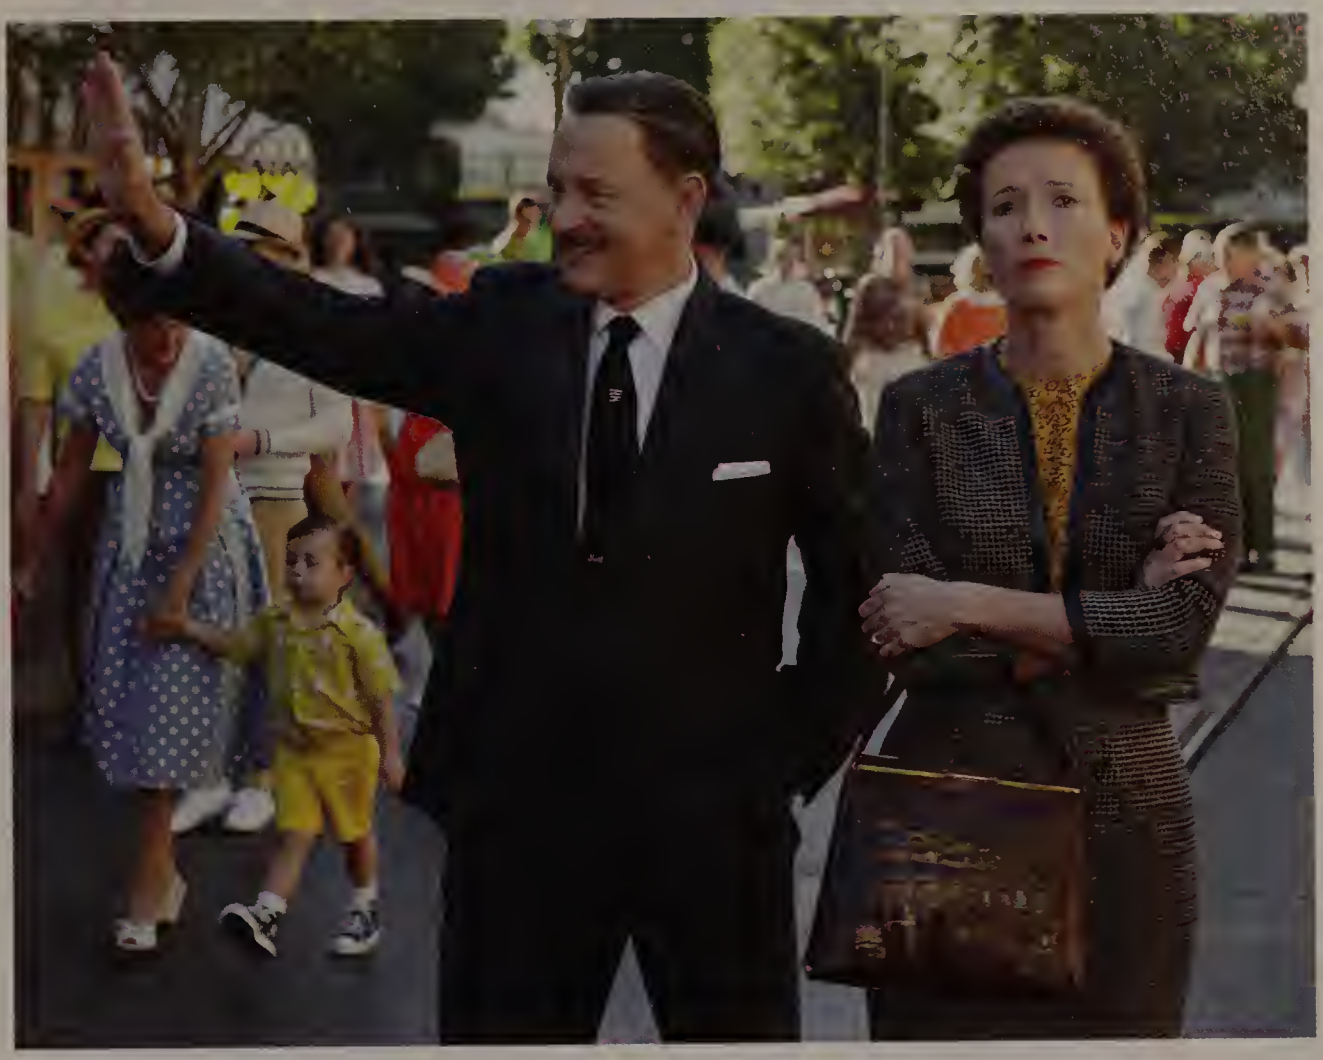
Her ★★★★ We all spend too much time with our smartphones, but Joaquin Phoenix falls hard for Siri in this one-joke movie that blossoms into something of a miracle. Written and directed by Being John Malkovich and Where the Wild Things Are savant Spike Jonze, Her is a tender and ruefully funny meditation on modern relationships and what it means to love in a world where we're all in constant communication, yet seemingly lonelier than ever. The film is set in a quasi-futuristic Apple Store Los Angeles, where sentient operating systems work as personal secretaries. Samantha (voiced in an astounding performance by Scarlett Johansson) takes a shine to Phoenix's awkward, introverted Theodore, and the two develop a chemistry that's all the more remarkable because she never actually appears onscreen. Her is almost overstuffed with philosophical musings on the role of technology in the way we live now. But in its big aching heart, it's a love story, and a great one. Relationships end and people grow apart, even when they live inside your phone. (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)



MOUSE TALES Tom Hanks and Emma Thompson star as Walt Disney and P.L. Travers in Saving Mr. Banks. PHOTO: FRANÇOIS DUHAMEL

The Hunger Games: Catching Fire ★★ 1/2 What a difference a director makes. When we last caught up with Katniss Everdeen, she was reluctantly killing kids in Seabiscuit helmer Gary Ross' aesthetically ugly, sloppily staged adaptation of Suzanne Collins' young-adult megaseller. One year and a few hundred million dollars later, this series has fallen into the hands of filmmaker Francis Lawrence, of I Am Legend and the underrated Constantine fame. Lawrence has an eye for striking visuals but has never found a script to match his talent. He doesn't find one here either, but Catching Fire is still a huge improvement over its predecessor in nearly every way. Jennifer Lawrence's Katniss is back, shouldering the burden of martyrdom in a future dystopia where the rich enlist the poor to kill each other off in televised spectacles. Pulpy melodrama continues apace, but this time around with lush, burnished images and a budget to match the ambition. It's quite engrossing until the movie abruptly stops midscene, teasing another sequel coming soon to a theater near you. Sigh, the perils of franchise maintenance. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Inside Llewyn Davis ★★★★ My favorite movie in years is the Coen brothers' most melancholic reverie, ditching their usual clockwork plotting for a loosey-goosey drift through a rotten week in the life of an itinerant troubadour skirting around the edges of the Greenwich Village scene in 1961. Oscar Isaac's Llewyn Davis is living hand-to-mouth without even a winter coat. Sharp, sour and more than a little bit of a dick, Llewyn is couch-surfing across Washington Square while pompously asserting his folk-singer superiority (Isaac strums a bunch from the Dave Van Ronk songbook, quite wonderfully). As the bleak, semi-surreal collection of anecdotes proceeds from bad to worse with the filmmakers' patented precision, the deadpan indifference of the Coens' cruel universe has never been so deeply felt, so soulfully sung or more mordantly hilarious. Bending itself into a Möbius strip of back-alley beatdowns, Inside Llewyn Davis is a movie for acerbic also-rans shat upon by life—a salute to all the people who never made it. It's a triumphant ode to failure. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Lone Survivor ★★ Good intentions don't always make good movies. The story goes that director Peter Berg agreed to the indignity of directing Battleship, just so long as the studio agreed to fund this bruising, bloody tribute to Navy SEALs fighting in Afghanistan. Working from Marcus Luttrell's memoir (the title of which is a huge spoiler), the film follows four guys stranded in Taliban territory, shooting it out for some 50-odd minutes of screen time in a blow-by-blow account of an operation gone wrong. Lone Survivor means well, but is unbearably dull. Mark Wahlberg, Ben Foster and Emile Hirsch strangle their wild screen personas as interchangeable embodiments of all that is stoic and decent about America. Only Berg's Friday Night Lights discovery Taylor Kitsch is allowed a personality, so of course he doesn't stick around long. The movie ignores geopolitical context in favor of long, slow-motion sequences of heroes dying noble deaths to an overwrought electric guitar score by Explosions in the Sky. By the end it feels like a recruiting ad in which everybody dies. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Nebraska ★★ Everything about Nebraska, Alexander Payne's sixth feature and first stinker, feels secondhand. It's a gimmicky sitcom script gussied up with self-consciously "artful" affectations borrowed from the New Hollywood heyday of the early '70s. Except it doesn't even get those right. The picture's entire aesthetic design comes off like a wise-ass kid dressing up in his cool uncle's old clothes and wearing them wrong. The terminally bland Will Forte stars as a stereo salesman who takes a road trip with his gruff, alcoholic father (Bruce Dern), who thinks he's won a million dollars from a Publishers Clearing House-type sweepstakes letter he recently got in the mail. There's a tension between Dern's crumbling old-school masculinity and Forte's modern-guy ineffectualness that goes maddeningly unexplored. It's just really boring and sad. The pacing is so gummed up by homages to The Last Picture Show that if you removed all the shots of deteriorating storefronts, this 115-minute film would barely be feature length. Despite the ostentatious visual scheme and constant callbacks to cinematic giants, Nebraska feels flatter than the landscapes it depicts. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

The Past ★★★ As you might recall from 2011's Oscar-winning A Separation, Iranian filmmaker Asghar Farhadi's family dramas unfold in a classical, patient tradition punctuated by bombshell revelations—sort of like if Ibsen or Chekhov wrote mystery novels. His latest, The Past, transplants the action to Paris, where The Artist's Bérénice Bejo awaits the arrival of her estranged husband (Ali Mosaffa). After four years of minimal contact, these two are supposed to be finally getting a divorce so she can marry her new beau (Tahar Rahim, from A Prophet). As in Farhadi's previous picture, nothing is quite as it appears on the surface. Information is parceled out gradually, so we're left to puzzle over strange emotional exchanges as a bigger, thornier picture only slowly becomes clear. There's a lot more than meets the eye going on in this household, too much maybe. But even as his plot teeters into melodrama, the filmmaker keeps tight control of the formal compositions and deftly underplayed performances. Expanding in scope as it goes along, the movie grows on you. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

WINNER BOSTON'S BEST 2013

Saving Mr. Banks ★½ Purporting to be the true story of how Walt Disney convinced uptight author P.L. Travers to let him adapt her precious Mary Poppins books for the big screen, Saving Mr. Banks is a steaming plate of corporate propaganda with a side of character assassination. It's also a movie about a contract negotiation, and about as interesting as that sounds. Though in real life she was reportedly a bar-crawling bisexual single mother, the film presents Travers as a miserable spinster played by a tut-tutting Emma Thompson, who seems to be channeling the host of Weakest Link. Tom Hanks' twinkly Uncle Walt not only wins her over with whimsy, but also therapeutically resolves Travers' issues about her long-dead alcoholic father (well played by Colin Farrell in flashbacks) until tears and soppy music ensue. Saving Mr. Banks advocates artists selling out to a corporation that always knows best. Hanks smuggles in a few grace notes of prickly determination in a movie that's otherwise an infomercial for the company that produced it. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Secret Life of Walter Mitty ★★ Full of fortune-cookie wisdom about living your dreams, this years-in-the-making labor of love for director-star Ben Stiller undercuts the pious sermons with so much product placement I kept reaching for the remote to try to fast-forward through the commercials. Unfortunately, you can't do that in a movie theater. Stiller plays a sad-sack everyman on the verge of losing his job at Life magazine after misplacing a cover photo by a legendary war correspondent. For reasons that don't make much sense, Stiller ends up running all over Greenland, Iceland and Afghanistan and learning how to become a better person or something. The movie is beautifully photographed, well-directed and utterly inane. It's difficult to build momentum when characters won't stop shilling for eHarmony and Papa John's, and the film bottoms out when Patton Oswalt drops by to extol the virtues of Cinnabon. I also had a hard time sitting still for a condescending lecture about risk-taking from Stiller, Hollywood royalty who never had to get a job. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Wolf of Wall Street ★★★★ An obscenity, an abomination and the movie this country deserves right now. Martin Scorsese's epic assault on propriety and good taste stars Leonardo DiCaprio as stockbroker scumbag Jordan Belfort, one of the countless who looted the American Dream and gagged on the spoils of wretched excess. It's another Scorsese gangster picture, only this time it's white-collar and played out as a broad, bilious farce. Pumped up with adrenaline and cocaine, the picture blasts off like a rocket ship into such a frenzied orgy of sex, drugs and decadence that both Hunter S. Thompson and Federico Fellini might consider it a bit much. The Wolf of Wall Street zings at warp speed from one fiendishly entertaining, appalling set-piece to another, until the movie's gargantuan three-hour running time reveals Scorsese's moral severity. It's all too much too-much-ness about people for whom too much was never enough. The grotesque excess becomes deadening and the emptiness chilling. DiCaprio is fearlessly smarmy, Jonah Hill makes a revolting sidekick, and they heroically debase themselves in the funniest, angriest movie of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SPARK PLUG With his acoustic-guitar jams, big hair and love-inspired lyrics, Trevor Dahl is dredging up memories of John Mayer, without leaving a heap of heartbroken girls in his wake. By the time he was 18, his music project, Plug in Stereo, had already toured the U.S. with bands like Dashboard Confessional, Never Shout Never and the Ready Set, self-released two EPs and dropped a full-length studio debut, Nothing to Something. Now 20 years old, the up-and-comer has a new EP, A Little Peace, due this month. Hear the new tunes on Jan. 20 when Plug in Stereo plays the Sinclair. Hannah Brown

Edited by Sarah Hagman

DÉJÀ NEW It's said that those who don't learn from history are doomed to repeat it, but history bears repeating in the art of Ben Steele. In his exhibit Appropriate, Steele whimsically drops renowned artworks into new contexts. Just Beachy takes the Venus de Milo from the Louvre to a tropical beach, clothing the cultural icon in a bikini top. Other paintings play with works by Andy Warhol, John Singer Sargent and Leonardo da Vinci to explore how historical art fits into a modern world. Take a lesson from the past at Arden Gallery through Jan. 29. Daniel Petersen

BOOKS & POETRY

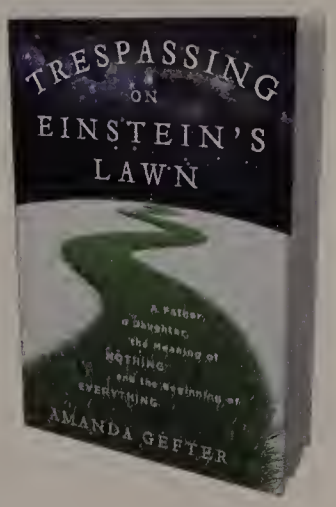
WEIRD SCIENCE



Author Amanda Gefter has made something out of nothing. In her memoir Trespassing on Einstein's Lawn, the science journalist traces a father-daughter quest to explore the mysteries of the universe that began with a question her dad posed to her at age 15: "How would you define nothing?" With the help of scientists Leonard Susskind, Ed Witten and Stephen Hawking, she aims to make sense of our vast universe—and find her own place in it. Study up on modern physics and family ties on Jan. 14 at Brookline Booksmith. / Maria Scenna

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

BEST OF ALL? NO MORTGAGE PAYMENTS

Hansel and Gretel would have had a field day at the Showcase SuperLux in Chestnut Hill, where The Home for Little Wanderers hosted its fifth annual Gingerbread Decorating Competition to celebrate the organization's new Toy Room and Big Wishes Gift Drive.

The event paired chefs and celebutantes with sweet-toothed junior architects and real-estate developers, who were greeted with enough candy to keep an army of dentists filling cavities for all eternity and by Celtics mascot Lucky doing gymnastics.

Prominent among the throng: brunette bombshell Julie Hume Gordon and her ridiculously cute 4-year-old, James, fashionista Tonya Chen Mezrich with the adorable Asher and Arya, smoldering beauty Jasmine Punzalan with her handsome little handful, Lucas, furniture mogul Michelle Pepe (spotted licking frosting off her hands), and a 5-year-old named Sade Olsen who befriended Summer Shack owner Jasper White and then told him she was going to crush him in the competition.

As it turned out, White's creation, co-decorated by fashion designer Sara Campbell with buttons from her atelier, won the prize for "Most Noteworthy," while Olsen's boasted a sugar tree forest courtesy of Mandarin Oriental pastry chef Oralia Perez and was the favorite of the nonprofit's head honcha, Joan Wallace-Benjamin. Coldwell Banker bigwig Pat Villani had help from her grandson, Logan, 5, in making a dream home complete with Goldfish cracker trellises, pretzel fences and Tootsie Roll lanterns lining the path, and the closing seemed to go smoothly. Asher Mezrich, meanwhile, cleverly figured out that Life Savers bitten in half made a nifty bridge, and he then selflessly offered to make them. Trying to impress the Celtics' mascot, American Hustle actress Erica McDermott and daughters Maisy and Katie incorporated a hot tub into their design, and although they didn't win the "Lucky's Choice" award, they did walk away with "Best Use of Candy" honors.

In the end, the creations ranged from an all-pink confection with tons of fluffy coconut to a haunted house covered in spiders and cobwebs made of frosting, and the decorating had escalated to the point where broadcasting smoothie David O'Leary and gluten-free guru Laura Raposa put dollops of frosting on the noses of their 3-year-old twin teammates.

However, the proverbial cherry on top of the ice cream sundae that was this event is the fact that yours truly didn't have to deal with any of the kids once all the sugar kicked in.

VISIONS OF SUGARPLUM FAIRIES

Adding extra sparkle to an already dazzling holiday tradition, Boston Ballet hosted Nutcracker Magic at the Ritz-Carlton, where kids and kids at heart were transported to the Land of Sweets, but not before sitting down for a delicious and nutritious dinner.

Guests were greeted by characters from the ballet, as well as craft tables where they could make artwork or get their faces painted (prompting one person to wonder why the mothers bothered to do their makeup at home).

Front and center were event chair Alison Quirk, honorees Angela and Tom Menino, stalwart supporter Eleanor Pao, silver fox Pam Humphrey, Fidelity exec Pam Norley, new dad Yo-el Cassell, Tito "No Relation to Michael" Jackson, the gregarious and gorgeous Hannah Grove, uber-attorneys Susan Fried and Timothy Diggins, the stunning Andrea Hoff, low-key big deal Stephanie Brown, and scads of freshly scrubbed kids in their Sunday best and on their best behavior.

Eventually, the adults sat down to a delicious three-course meal, blessedly accompanied by some excellent wines, which almost made up for the fact that the young 'uns got chicken fingers, curly fries and crudités (cleverly served in a mason jar).

Then it was off to the Opera House for the performance, which was magical, even for the kids who are allergic to nuts. ◆

MAN HOURS

HERE'S SOMETHING TO CHEW ON: Combos, that esteemed purveyor of nacho-cheese pretzels, ranked Boston a paltry 47th out of 50 in its list of America's manliest cities. Oklahoma City, meanwhile, clocked in at number one. Now, normally we wouldn't question the methodology of any study from a company that makes its snack foods with Real Cheese™, but here we have to beg to differ. For starters, our cover subject, Celtics forward Jeff Green, has lived and played in both cities. And though he gives nice props to OKC, it's pretty clear by the end of Jonathan Soroff's interview which town comes out on top in his playbook.

What's more, we had no trouble finding testosterone-fueled adventures for our Man issue. Scott Kearnan explores some jobs that are far from your average nine-to-five, shadowing locals who play with fire and brave heights of 800 feet during their typical workdays. On the fashion front, Lydia Santangelo brings us a team of urban explorers outfitted in layered looks, with leather and velvet, sneakers and suits, and other cool combinations sure to supply style inspiration for men this season and into the next. And Ezra Dyer gets driving lessons at a school founded by a champion rally racer, putting supercars through their paces in wintry conditions. But don't think that it's a boys' club. "There must be something about sliding a car around on dirt that raises one's testosterone level, regardless of gender," he writes, noting the number of women drawn to the sport's "adrenaline spigot." As I've found in this issue, the appeal of a little macho fun knows no bounds.

CHEF PAUL WAHLBERG DISHES ON HIS NEW A&E SHOW »»

Family Style

Running a restaurant has its challenges, and Paul Wahlberg certainly has a full plate juggling two Hingham eateries. But recently the chef has been dealing with some unusual guests: the camera crew that entered the Wahlburgers kitchen to film an A&E reality series. Wahlberg has spent 30 years in the restaurant industry—including time at the Charles Hotel, the Four Seasons and Hull's Bridgeman's—but he'd never before considered filming a show or getting into the entertainment business like his brothers. "I worked with Mark as his personal chef on three films, and I'd gone to visit sets, so I had a rough idea, but I'd never been someone that was involved," Wahlberg says.

Amid all the TV crew members, Wahlberg worked to ensure that his staff had room to do their jobs and deliver the service his customers expect, all the while dealing with his famous clan's unique family dynamics. On Wahlburgers, he's joined by his brothers turned business partners, Mark and Donnie, and his mother, Alma, who's involved at their restaurant across the street, Alma Nove, named for her and her nine children. "There are days where I'm very much trying to do my job, and then at the same time falling into my mom [who's] standing over me, you know, the way my dad would stand over me as a kid." But she's a welcome presence to Wahlberg, who, after all, put family front and center when naming his restaurants. "When you're a kid growing up in the city and everybody's always giving you a hard time, you get lots of nicknames," Wahlberg explains of the burger joint's moniker. "Even with the kids' menu, we have Smahlburger. I'm small in stature, shall we say, so everyone would always call me Paul Smahlberg." Are there other nicknames his family and staff members have for him? "Not that I can repeat," he jokes. Join the family affair when the show premieres on Jan. 22. / Sarah Hagman

Wahlburgers airs on Wednesdays at 10:30 pm on A&E.*

ESTER PEEPS

A NEW EATERY WITH DOT PRIDE

Eleanor Arpino, the owner of ester, which will replace Ledge Kitchen & Drinks in March or April, is clear on the origins of the name: It's not a woman's name, and it's not a chemical compound. She describes the appellation as "all lowercase, as in 'Dorchester,' because we're at the end of Dorchester itself, on the Milton border."

Arpino is both an industry veteran—she was vice president and director of operations for Davio's for more than a decade—and a longtime resident of ester's Lower Mills neighborhood. "This is all about neighborhood," she says, adding that she plans to focus on training motivated city kids to succeed in the restaurant business. "My passion has always been training," Arpino explains, adding that she's "frustrated" by the lack of diversity in the front of the house at Boston restaurants. "It's all about attitude and personality; I can teach the other stuff," she states. Case in point: ester's chef, Gabriel "Esteban" Gallego. "Esteban started as a dishwasher and worked his way up" to sous chef at Avila.

As for the menu, expect neighborhood-friendly price points, daily specials and strictly seasonal dishes: "We're not going to serve a caprese salad in the middle of winter," Arpino says.

MAKING THE CASE FOR KALE

Are the leafy green's 15 minutes of fame just about over? Not according to local cookbook author Catherine Walthers, who's working on an all-kale cookbook. "Kale has the backbone to match its hype," she says. "It's top on the vegetable charts for nutrition and so easy to use in the kitchen." Still not convinced? "There's a worldwide shortage of kale seeds, due to its popularity," she continues. But there's lots more kale on the way. Kale, Glorious Kale, slated to be published in the fall, boasts "80 amazing kale recipes people will love," according to Walthers, including kale slaw, rustic kale and goat cheese tart, breakfast dishes and even cocktails. The Emerald Gimlet is a concoction of gin, fresh ginger, fresh lime juice, simple syrup and juiced kale. Walthers says she served it at a dinner party, and diners requested seconds.

GREENHOUSE EFFECT: Skylights and plants adorn an area of Alden & Harlow, chef/owner Michael Scelfo's new restaurant.

Alden & Harlow

(617-864-2100) aldenandharlow.com

SCELFO'S DESIGNS FOR ALDEN & HARLOW

MICHAEL SCELFO MADE HIS NAME with meat when he was the executive chef at Russell House Tavern, but the chef/owner of Alden & Harlow is moving beyond the Prince of Porc title he earned at Cochon 555 last year. Vegetables and grains will get a starring role alongside meat on the menu when the highly anticipated restaurant opens in late January in the spot formerly home to Casablanca, built by turn-of-the-century architects Frank Alden and Alfred Harlow.

"My wife is a big gardener, and we always have vegetables in the kitchen. I just really took to eating like that," Scelfo says. "We always look at the meat or protein as being the center of the plate, and everything else has to complement that. But what if you flipped it a bit? Why couldn't you use it to complement a potato or complement a carrot?"

The downplaying of meat on menus is a trend Scelfo is embracing. As a case in point, he spotlights the sunchoke crostino, featuring sunchoke presented three ways on bread. Don't worry, charcuterie diehards: Scelfo isn't going whole-hog vegetarian. That crostino comes with lardo, and there will be a number of locally sourced meat options on the menu, including an always-changing burger (slyly called the "secret burger"), of which he'll offer 36 each day. All the dishes will be served in a moderate size to encourage sharing.

That community style is reflected in the space, which includes communal tables in the middle of its main dining area. But the restaurant also has plenty of other spots: high-tops in the lounge across from the bar, banquettes along the wall in the dining room, a counter near the open kitchen and "greenhouse" seating near the street that will fit about 25 people and have a view through the skylights.

The bar is the centerpiece of the layout, and it not only fills the former Casablanca, but also what used to be an optical shop. Bar manager Seth Freidus (Eastern Standard) has six drafts and a heavy brown-spirit program planned, along with Old World-style wines. Service might be quicker than at other bars thanks to the plan to offer two craft cocktails on tap—a seasonal vermouth and a rotating choice. Equipped with a little broiler and oven, one corner of the bar will be devoted to live cooking and focus on a handful of dishes.

"I think when people sit on this side, they can interact with the cook, and the cook can actually hand them their food. I think people love that experience," Scelfo says.

Originally scheduled to open last summer, Alden & Harlow has seen a few delays, but the experience of opening his first restaurant has been rewarding for Scelfo, who jokes: "I would actually do it again."

Q&A FIRST STRING

The Magnetic Fields' Stephin Merritt plays live as part of the Institute of Contemporary Art's dance and installation art production, Performance, Jan. 24–25.

WHY ARE YOU PERFORMING WITHOUT A MICROPHONE AT THE ICA? It's a small space. I won't need a microphone. Music is better without amplification.

ARE THERE ANY SONGS OF YOURS THAT YOU WOULDN'T WANT TO SEE SET TO DANCE? No. The style of dance that I'm working with is not anything that would be destructive to the music, 'cause it's not intertwining with the music particularly. It's not the same as making a music video, which always tears apart the song and puts it back together in some background music kind of way.

HOW MANY INSTRUMENTS WOULD YOU SAY THAT YOU OWN? I can't really answer that because so many of them are percussion instruments, and percussion instruments combine to form larger instruments, so you can't easily say where one ends and the next begins. Outside of percussion instruments, probably 100. That's my hobby.

YOU WORKED AS A COPY EDITOR AT SPIN AND TIME OUT NEW YORK. IS IT SAFE TO SAY YOUR SONGS DON'T HAVE MANY GRAMMATICAL ERRORS? Oh no, I have plenty of grammatical errors in my songs, and I wholeheartedly endorse grammatical errors in popular music. "The Times They Are A-Changin'" would be very hard to translate into correct English without ruining the song. If you can't use what would otherwise be substandard language for repetition, then the musicality of the text falls apart.

IN YOUR 2010 DOCUMENTARY AND IN YOUR MUSIC, YOU SEEM FAIRLY INTROVERTED. DO YOU ENJOY PERFORMING LIVE? Sometimes performing live can be a hoot if I'm getting to do something that I don't ordinarily do. What I don't like doing really is touring, where I have to do the same performance again and again in different cities and I never get to go home. It's a low level of torture. Sleep deprivation is considered part of torture, and sleep deprivation is definitely part of the touring package. / Hannah Sheinberg

Good Eats: Southern-Style Spaghetti

If Hungry Mother is where Mastering the Art of French Cooking and The Virginia Housewife found common ground, then it's no wonder that State Park, the pretension-damning taproom brought to Kendall Square by the same team, is where chef/co-owner Barry Maiden chose to introduce Memphis BBQ spaghetti. This red-sauce-joint-meets-BBQ-shack dish features noodles coated with a sweet, tangy sauce that's bulked up with chunks of smoked pork shoulder and shavings of caramel-y Stravecchio—kind of like Sunday ragu crossed with baked beans. KICKIN' IT: Boston Boot Company's Cambridge, Newbury and Commonwealth styles

CRAFT SHOES

Beer has been known to inspire many an idea. It was over a few drinks that neighbors Joe Lyons and Joe Prew began plotting Boston Boot Company, a brand of men's boots with a business model partly founded on craft-brew principles. "Boston Beer Company was definitely a role model we had in mind," Lyons explains. "By taking the time to focus on better ingredients and a craft approach, [microbreweries] were able to introduce higher-quality product with greater substance and more personality." Lyons and Prew, who has worked with brands like Nike and Timberland, drafted designer Chad Gombes to combine practicality and style. The material is sourced from Chicago tannery Horween, whose leather is also used by companies like Allen Edmonds, in NFL and NBA game balls, and in major-league baseball gloves. Ranging in price from $190 to $225 and named after locales like Newbury Street and Cambridge, the footwear starts shipping in March, still in the thick of New England's weather woes. And the "micro-shoery" has plans brewing for limited-edition shoe "batches" and oxfords so that Bostonians can be well-heeled in all seasons. / Sarah Hagman

FIGHT CLUB

FEELING PUNCHY: George Foreman III is undefeated (16–0, including 15 knockouts) in his professional boxing career, but he's hoping that—much like his dad—he can also rack up some wins with his business career. The Club, Foreman's boxing-themed gym, combines both of his interests.

The key to staying motivated is as simple as a one-two punch. George Foreman III, son of the former heavyweight champion boxer and grill master George Foreman, discusses his recently opened Fort Point gym, The Club, and sheds a little light on his spar power. / Hannah Weintraub

WHAT'S THE BIGGEST MISCONCEPTION ABOUT BOXING? That it's about being physical. It's a thinking man's sport, the grandfather of chess. The same rules apply, except the stakes are much higher.

WHAT'S THE CORRECT BOXING STANCE? Start with your left foot in front, aimed straight ahead (12 o'clock). Put your right foot in the rear, pointed at 2 o'clock. Aim your left shoulder at your opponent. Tuck elbows into ribs, with your hand in front of shoulders. Keep your fists tight, thumbs pointed straight forward, and keep that chin tucked.

WHAT DO PEOPLE MOST COMMONLY DO WRONG WHEN THEY THROW A PUNCH? Shoot a punch without a tightly clenched fist and snatch it back.

HOW DOES ONE EAT LIKE A BOXER? Stick to lean meat, sweat potatoes and veggies with deep, rich color. Only heat and cook as necessary for safety; close to raw is better with your veggies. Go easy on the fruit, but eat plenty of berries. Cut out simple sugar and stick to buying food from the three walls of the grocery store.

ARE THERE ANY BOXING TECHNIQUES FROM YOUR DAD YOU'VE INCORPORATED INTO THE CLUB EXERCISES? "Joog it." Stop by and find out what it means!

KARMA IN STORE

TO MY NEIGHBORHOOD CONVENIENCE STORE EMPLOYEE: I've been nice to you for more than seven years while living near the convenience store where you work. Even when you are derelict in your duties, I wait patiently for you to finish your phone call, pretend to mop, be completely absent from the store for minutes on end, etc. But when you asked how my wife is doing tonight and I said we got a divorce and I'm heartbroken, I did not need you to say, "I saw her recently and she seems much happier than you." You are a mean person. I truly hope someday to be there in person while you reach your nadir, so I can delight in smirking at you with perfect extended eye contact.

TO THE TWO BUSINESSMEN HOGGING TABLES AT PANERA: I applaud your decision to spend your valuable lunch break at Panera, much like myself. However, you two earn demerits for being oblivious to your surroundings. While I was lucky to snag an inside table with a single chair during the claustrophobic noontime stampede, I noticed you two fellas were already done with your meals for quite some time and decided to chitchat for another hour or two. And not only were you two enjoying a grand old time, but you chose to use the empty table next to you as a station for your empty plates and bowls. Meanwhile, I counted several desperate families meandering their way through the area in search of seating. You'll have to excuse them for not speaking up while struggling to herd their hungry and whiny tykes in tow. The situation was almost sad enough to ruin my chicken Caesar salad. Almost. How about next time you save everyone the trouble and take your meal to go?

Ports to Call

Whoever loves chocolate (and who doesn't?) needs to know about port. I first discovered the delicious Portuguese fortified wine at a dinner many years ago, and I was astonished at how much combining one decadent pleasure with another could magnify the enjoyment of both. Whether chocolate is in the picture or not, a frigid winter night is the ideal time to savor this rich, luscious, 20 percent alcohol wine, as just a few sips will warm you to a glowing contentment and more than satisfy your sweet tooth. But with so many different styles available, the port category can be confusing. The following three are moderately priced and will keep after opening—with no appreciable loss of character—for up to two weeks.

__Sandy Block__ is the vice president of beverage operations for Legal Sea Foods.

FONSECA, "BIN 27" RESERVE PORT Bin 27 is the leader in the so-called reserve category. An upgrade from basic ruby port, this deep purple blend is aged in wood for an average of four years before bottling. It's got dark berry and cocoa aromas, lush black fruit flavors and a very moderate level of tannin. One of the most prestigious port producers, Fonseca's vintage selections often rate higher than any in the region. This silky, mellow wine is a bargain selection and a fine brownie accompaniment.

$17, Blanchard's, Jamaica Plain

FONSECA, 10 YEAR OLD TAWNY Mahogany brown in color with hints of red, 10-year-old aged tawnies tend to present a completely different flavor profile: butterscotch, maple and dried fig. Fonseca's is among the finest. With each sip, this silky, soft-textured, melt-in-your-mouth port reveals layers of complexity: apricot, baked cherry, cinnamon, toffee, orange zest and mocha. Its warm spicy overtones and lingering dried-fruit flavors make this an ideal choice for custard-filled desserts or honey-based pastries as well as milk-chocolate cakes.

TAYLOR FLADGATE, "LATE BOTTLED VINTAGE," 2007 LBVs are made from the grapes of a single harvest (in this case the highly regarded 2007 vintage) and bottled after five to six years in cask. The originator of this style back in the late '50s, Taylor Fladgate continues to make a classic powerhouse. With blackberry, coffee and walnut flavors, it's a bit fiery on the palate, with tannins intense and lingering. This bold, somewhat raisiny style pairs nicely with full-flavored aged cheeses as well as bittersweet chocolate desserts.

Purveyors: Loco for Loukaniko

You can prepare the loukaniko from Telio Foods, a new Dorchester-based company, just as you would any other variety of pork sausage: Slice the snappy, thick-skinned, rustic-textured links into thick coins, brown them in a little fat and serve them as a meze (fried halloumi is a natural pairing), or sear them whole with some sliced onions. But it's the startlingly brilliant flavor that sets apart this traditional Greek sausage. Going head to head with the meatiness of the pork is a hit of orange that's also floral and more than a little bitter, all kept in check by the sweetening effect of leeks and fennel. / Elizabeth Bomze

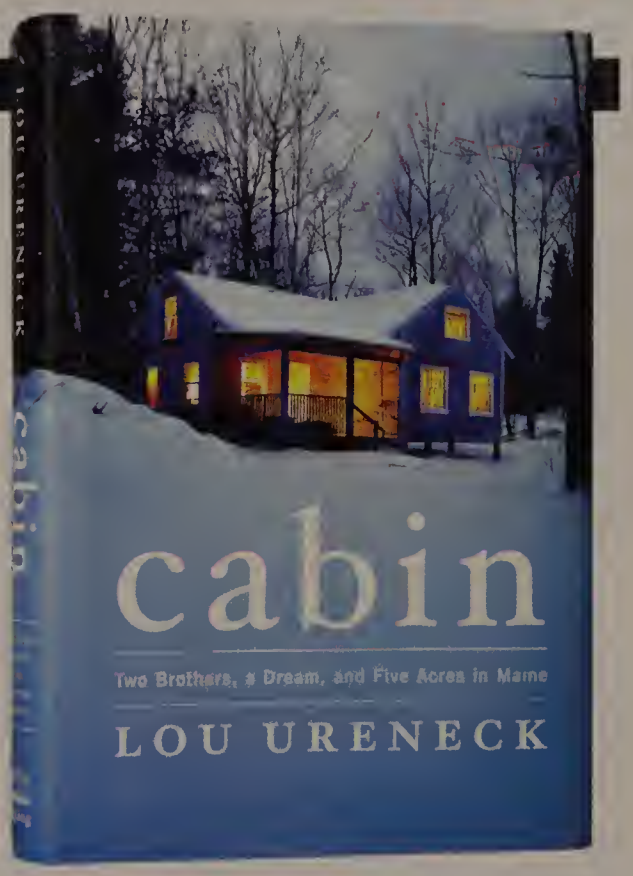
URENECK OF THE WOODS

TWO BROTHERS BUILD AND BOND IN RURAL MAINE.



HOLLY RIKE

Cabin* by Lou Ureneck
Published by Viking, 256 pages, $26
The author is a professor of journalism at Boston University.

LOU URENECK WORKS SKILLFULLY WITH his hands in two ways: building a cabin in Maine and musing about the experience through the physically lighter act of writing.

At a crossroads, having faced his mother's death, a divorce and some mental and physical aftermaths, Lou connects with his younger brother, Paul, for some very heavy lifting. As they build the cabin, their different natures—and opposite ways of interpreting their complex childhood with a single mother and an absent father—come together in a kind of humming harmony. The tougher Paul offers his grit and skill in the building process to help his more sensitive Thoreau- and Emerson-soaked brother. It nicely reverses their childhood dynamic.

There is something soothing and poetic about the way Ureneck describes the hard work and even the pitfalls of this project (as well as its ironies: his plot of land was originally taken from the Native Americans). Having built an earlier house during his marriage, he sees this venture as a means of re-rooting himself.

And he bonds with his brother, demonstrating the stoical affection that guys can do so well.

FROM PAGE 121: This web of relationships showed in the construction of the cabin—he had access to tools, equipment and help when we needed them. Friendship is important to him. I on the other hand have lived a rich inner life, but it has been a self-absorbed life. Paul isn't reflective in the same way. He puts his thinking to work on solving practical problems—how to renovate the church's parish house kitchen or help a neighbor start his car. ◆

NORTHERN LIGHTS

SANDPOINT, IDAHO, MAY BE THE WEST'S BEST-KEPT SECRET.

Tell a Bostonian you're planning an Idaho vacation, and you'll most likely be met with confused looks and a few bad jokes about potatoes. And for the people of Sandpoint, Idaho, named America's "most beautiful small town" by USA Today and Rand McNally in 2011, they'd just as soon keep it that way, thank you very much. Because if word got out about the stunning mountain views, the dazzling 43-mile-long Lake Pend Oreille and the unsurpassed skiing, hiking, mountain biking and fishing, it certainly wouldn't be one of the final American frontiers for long.

For those who've been let in on the secret (Viggo Mortensen and Ben Stein are often spotted strolling the town's streets), Schweitzer Mountain Resort is the premier destination this time of year. Located in the Selkirk Mountains, Schweitzer is home to 2,900 skiable acres, 92 downhill runs, 11 cross country trails, three terrain parks and two open bowls. And with an average annual snowfall of 300 inches, fresh powder is almost guaranteed. Forget amusement park-esque lift lines; here they're nonexistent—probably why Ski Magazine named it North America's best-kept secret. And with ziplining, tubing, snowbiking and snowshoeing, thrill-seekers and play-it-safers alike will find something to write home about.

Lodging options range from mountainside condo rentals to RV parking, but first-time guests should consider booking a room at the resort's rustic-European-style Selkirk Lodge. Only a few steps from two main chairlifts and in the heart of the quaint Schweitzer Village, it's the closest to ski-on/ski-off accommodations you can come by. Families and larger groups would be best served by the condo-style White Pine lodge, just across the way from Selkirk and complete with gas fireplaces, lake views and full-size kitchens. For après-ski, hit Selkirk's Chimney Rock Grill, where Maine native Kelly Kennedy, formerly of Bristol's Coveside Marina & Restaurant, serves up creative cuisine (think zucchini tacos with crispy fried chickpeas or baked brie with pecan brûlée and warm crostini).

While you could easily spend an entire week and never leave the resort, that would be an enormous mistake. Some of the region's best fare, art happenings and nightlife can be found in downtown Sandpoint, "an artsy hippie town that grew up," as one local put it. Live music echoes from underground venues nearly every night of the week—locals' favorites are Downtown Crossing and the "beatnik" Eichardt's Pub—while those with a more-refined palate can catch bluegrass, jazz or Americana acts while sipping vino at Pend d'Oreille Winery, where five tastes will only run you $5 and experts offer commentary free of charge. If you'd rather pound beers, Mick Duff's microbrewery is just around the corner. (Note: Do not miss the beer cheese soup.)

When it comes time for dinner, townies will recommend Trinity at City Beach. Don't be alarmed by its proximity to the Best Western: Inside are vast floor-to-ceiling windows overlooking the lake and providing a view of a charmingly quirky 7-foot reproduction of the Statue of Liberty. The corn and crawfish chowder will make you rethink your devotion to the clammy stuff, and the pine-nut-crusted Idaho ruby trout gives cod a run for its money.

Book a trip for Presidents Day weekend to attend the annual family-friendly Winter Carnival and witness the one-of-a-kind "ski joring" competition, where riders on horseback pull skiers through snowy obstacle courses over jumps and gates. Other weekend highlights include wine tastings, a wacky float parade and "Cirque de Sandpoint," where local acrobats and aerial artists mimic the popular Cirque du Soleil.

If a sunny getaway's more your style, plan your vacation around the summer music festival in August. For eight nights, festival-goers catch world-class acts like the Avett Brothers, the Steve Miller Band and the John Butler Trio from beach blankets under the starry sky. Whether you're a snowbird or a serious shredder, Sandpoint is sure to please. ◆

SPICE ROUTE

WITH BOLD TURKISH FARE, SARMA MAKES AN IMPRESSIVE DEBUT.

SARMA
249 Pearl St., Somerville
(617-764-4464)
sarmarestaurant.com

WHENEVER I FALL FOR A NEW restaurant, I step back for a reality check. Is this place good by neighborhood standards, I ask, or is it worth a drive across the city during rush hour?

With Sarma, there's no question. First, there aren't neighborhood standards to judge against—the new spot lives at the edge of Winter Hill, on a block with few signs of life after 8 pm. But it's also one of the few recent launches offering something truly different. While many romance crowds by riffing on classics, subbing farro and marrow for pasta and butter—Hey, look what I put on your steak!—it's rare to find a buzzy new place serving almost nothing that's familiar to the average diner.

Opened by chef Cassie Piuma and her longtime mentor, Oleana's Ana Sortun, Sarma is a joyful embrace of Turkish cuisine, rich in Greek and Middle Eastern influences. The menu is composed of small meze ranging from a few bites (the meyhane snacks) to larger dishes (the shish).

Hummus, tzatziki and lamb souvlakia are about as mainstream as it gets. Piuma has mercifully supplied a glossary, making dukkah, labne, brik and zhoug not just approachable, but appealing. It visibly relieves a young couple seated near our table, and we watch as they relax and dig in.

Pumpkin fritters ($5) come topped with cilantro sauce, walnuts and sesame seeds. They're a perfect mouthful, the crisp exterior yielding to a soft, fluffy center. Here, texture is everything, notably in three excellent meze selections: fava bean pâté ($6), a dense slab topped with a runny soft-cooked egg, tangy capers and red onion; tender octopus ($13) with crisp celery and plaki, a Greek bean dish; and squid saganaki ($11), a spicy, saucy, satisfying combination of calamari, tomato and bitter broccoli rabe.

The plates show impressive balance. Softness is countered with crunch; sweetness is checked by a shock of bitterness or acid. Salty haloumi cheese ($8), wrapped in charred vine leaves that crackle with each bite, is paired with raisin emulsion and roasted grapes. Smoky grilled eggplant salad ($6) has a lovely creeping heat. Zucchini and leek keftedes ($9), crisp latke-like fried patties, come with tangy and cool tzatziki sauce.

Lamb souvlakia ($16) is a Greek classic, and Sarma's is served as well and as simply as at any tavern—grilled herb-marinated meat on a stick, a few crispy potatoes and lemon. The harissa BBQ duck ($16), however, is the exact opposite: an intensely fragrant plate of sliced duck breast with a heavily spiced crust, served on a streak of orange blossom-scented carrot puree. It's stellar.

One quirk at Sarma is its dim sum-style specials. Dishes emerge from the kitchen without warning; if you partake, they're added to your bill. This can frustrate some diners—if you save room for extras that never come, you may end up hungry. Think of the specials as an indulgent bonus: The moist, sesame-crusted fried chicken thighs with tahini ($10), available on two separate visits, were a worthy splurge.

At the time of our visits, Sarma had only one dessert, a Greek-style frozen yogurt with a choice of toppings like halva caramel, but it has since added baklava and rice pudding. (Perhaps additional recipes borrowed from sister cafe Sofra will follow?) Cocktails are likewise evolving. On an initial visit, drinks paired poorly with the food: The earthy flavors of the agricole rum-based Hippodrome ($11) and the mild, citrusy Elettaria ($10) were no match for the bold meze. A week later, there were additions like the spicy, frothy Hermoso Ramo ($12), a far sturdier companion to bold cuisine. If you're wavering, stick with a sure thing: a pint from the excellent, funky beer list.

The space is mostly open and loft-like, with a few decorative flourishes. Glittering blue glass mosaic lamps hang above the bar, and colorful, intricately hand-painted porcelain plates cover a wall. They lend ambiance, but the focus remains squarely on the food. That's as it should be. When the flavors are this vibrant, there's no need for anything more. ◆

ASK CHERYL

Q: I HEAR A LOT ABOUT RETINOLS AND HOW THEY ARE GOOD FOR THE SKIN, BUT I DON'T UNDERSTAND WHY.

A: Retinol is a Vitamin A, an important anti-oxidant. It works to repair the lower layers of the skin where collagen and elastin reside. Retinol stimulates the production of these skin cells, creating firmer, smoother skin.

Slow cell regeneration is one reason skin becomes lined and discolored as it matures. This natural process slows down as we age, and retinol is the gold standard in ramping up cell renewal to produce smooth, evenly colored, younger-looking skin. It can also help control acne.

A high-quality retinol should be a part of everybody's skin care regimen. Not all brands of topical retinols are equal; just having retinol listed as an ingredient on the label does not mean that it is the proper concentration or is in the right form to be effective. Try our SkinHealth Advanced Retinol and let me know what you think!

THE INVISIBLE WOMAN ★★★½
Starring Ralph Fiennes, Felicity Jones, Kristin Scott Thomas, Tom Hollander, Joanna Scanlan. Screenplay by Abi Morgan. Directed by Ralph Fiennes. At Kendall Square and West Newton.

Movies / Sean Burns

AFFAIRS OF THE ART

RALPH FIENNES' DIRECTION HELPS THE INVISIBLE WOMAN STAND OUT.

THE FILMS WITH A KIND OF QUIET, thoughtful pleasure are too often overlooked amid the crush of more bombastic, higher-profile Oscar-season prestige releases. The Invisible Woman, a delicately wrought sophomore effort from director Ralph Fiennes, is slipping into area theaters almost under the radar. Displaying an uncommon respect for the audience and a confidence behind the camera that belies the filmmaker's limited experience, it's very much worth seeking out.

In lesser hands, The Invisible Woman could have been simply a tawdry tabloid tale from the Victorian era. Based on Claire Tomalin's 1990 book, it dishes the dirt on a sort of secret, much-whispered-about affair between Charles Dickens (Fiennes) and teenage actress Nelly Ternan (Felicity Jones). Nineteenth-century notions of propriety being what they were, it hadn't yet become commonplace for famous men to shed their wives for younger models every few years. And if they did, they certainly couldn't be so brazen about it. As such, this is a movie of repressed desires expressed in the space between words. Every conversation seems to be in code.

Ralph Fiennes has been on a roll recently with larger-than-life villainous roles, memorably missing a nose in the Harry Potter pictures and just a couple months ago getting his Dickens on by playing Magwitch in an adaptation of Great Expectations from director Mike Newell. But his deftly underplayed take on the legendary author is a welcome reminder of what a precise actor Fiennes can be, harking back to earlier performances like Quiz Show, in which the tiniest gestures are carefully judged.

He foregrounds Dickens' vanity, entertaining his rapt crowds of fans with forced conviviality and fussing with his hair to try to cover an increasingly balding pate. Things aren't going so well at home, as he's settled into a dreary cohabitation with his portly, disinterested wife (Joanna Scanlan). They ran out of things to say to one another years ago, and physical intimacy is obviously out of the question.

Charles Dickens made his living with words, but the movie thrives on silences.

So it's during a production of his friend Wilkie Collins' play, The Frozen Deep, that Dickens first lays eyes on Nelly. He's instantly smitten as a schoolboy and cannot stop complimenting her amusingly mediocre performance. This attention doesn't escape the eyes of Nelly's mother (Kristin Scott Thomas), a widow of little means attempting to raise her less-than-talented daughters in an almost impossible profession. The great writer's affection represents a possible way out for the entire family, or probable ruin if not handled with the utmost discretion.

Don't expect any fireworks from this English Patient reunion between Fiennes and Thomas. Their scenes together are negotiations during which neither side dares declare the terms. As for how Nelly feels about all this? Well, she's so young and starstruck she can barely be expected to consider the consequences.

Felicity Jones delivers an exquisitely internalized performance as Nelly, who's in thrall more to the man's writing than the man himself. He loves her more than she loves him, and the imbalance weighs on her heart. Screenwriter Abi Morgan refuses to provide the kind of dialogue scenes that spell everything out for inattentive viewers. Charles Dickens made his living with words, but the movie thrives on silences.

Fiennes and cinematographer Rob Hardy eschew the postcard-perfect Merchant Ivory tradition of quality trappings that often render these corseted costume dramas inert. This is a muddy London with a grimly overcast chill. We see the chamber pots and the frayed stitching of old clothes. The sets feel more lived-in than designed, and a harrowing midnight stroll through a grimy back alley packed with child prostitutes serves as a jarring reminder that this usually over-romanticized era wasn't all just tea time in drawing rooms.

Since little in the movie is explained aloud and the performances so restrained, Fiennes must rely on compositions and blocking to express what the characters cannot. Far more attentive to visual storytelling than most actors who step behind the camera, Fiennes conveys the shifting interpersonal dynamics through people's positions within the frame. It's a sophisticated approach that many more seasoned directors have yet to master with the skill displayed here.

The Invisible Woman's deliberate pacing and muted tone might try the patience of viewers enticed by the scandalous subject matter who are expecting a more typical Dickensian melodrama. But if you can get on the movie's wavelength, there is great power in the stillness and in Ralph Fiennes as a major filmmaker. ◆ plays the Sinclair on Feb. 4.

WEIGHTLESS

MATTHEW HOUCK LETS GO TO CRAFT AN ODE TO REDEMPTION.

"HONEY, I AM NOT SOME BROKEN THING," Matthew Houck sings over the hypnotic pulse of "Song for Zula," the gateway into Phosphorescent's acclaimed Muchacho. "I do not lay here in the dark waiting for thee. No, my heart is gold. My feet are light. And I am racing out in the desert plains all night."

One senses that Houck, who has performed under the Phosphorescent moniker since 2001, felt conceptually drawn to such wide-open spaces—lyrically and sonically—when it came to recording Muchacho.

"I kept thinking in terms of even more wide open than that, like not of this Earth," Houck says, reflecting on what led to one of 2013's most deeply enchanting and human albums.

Burned out from touring behind 2010's ironically titled Here's to Taking It Easy, the singer/songwriter had found himself at a loss for words, dabbling with sound pieces inspired by the ambient albums of Brian Eno. "There's a weightlessness, like being on the moon or something, like it's eerie and floaty," the Alabama-bred Houck says of Eno's soundscapes. "That's what I was aiming for when I was making this album. Then it changed and kind of took on a life of its own."

Alas, Houck's life was also falling apart at the dawn of 2012. He lost both his apartment (his landlord declined to renew the lease) and his girlfriend (who declined to continue the relationship). "I just realized it was time to chuck it all for a second," he says, "and that's when I went down to Mexico for a little while and got renewed with these songs."

An impulsive early-morning flight after a sleepless night brought Houck to the sleepy Yucatan Peninsula beach town of Tulum, and even lyrics began to flow. "The solitude was the most important ingredient there—I'm not the most disciplined writer," Houck says. "I still don't show songs to anyone until they're completely finished. I just don't feel comfortable working out ideas in front of other people."

"I'm not too sure how successful we're being at this yet, but we're trying to be a little healthier, with not so much self-damage."

He operates as a lone wolf in his home studio as well, laying down vocals, guitars, keyboards and percussion, though Houck brought in a dozen musicians to add parts that he molded into Muchacho. Bracketed by mantra-like sunrise chants, the album finds its strength in ghostly textures where he explores redemption—"spinning heartache into gold," to quote the countrified, horn-laced weeper "Down to Go."

"The theme of the whole record is that split between those extremes of hope and despair," Houck says, embracing the idea that hope prevails. "That's a big part of why it has those [sunrise] themes at the beginning and the end. I thought a lot of the songs were pretty bleak."

The tone opens up more onstage, as the guitar-wielding Houck takes a looser approach with two keyboardists, two drummers, a bassist and recently added pedal steel player Ricky Ray Jackson, who also appears on the album.

"Everything in the studio is far more considered and controlled—I'm definitely a perfectionist," says Houck, who brings Phosphorescent to the Sinclair on Feb. 4. "For the live shows, I'm open to letting the mood of the night dictate the way it's going to go... and this band that I have now, everybody's just so good, it can really ebb and flow."

Houck says that he finds touring to be less draining now that the group travels by bus instead of van. "It's still not the easiest way of life, but it's certainly not the hardest either," he says, adding, "I'm not too sure how successful we're being at this yet, but we're trying to be a little healthier, with not so much self-damage." Yeah, Houck is known for hard partying. "There's a release after being pent up all day," he says. "Then there's the show, and you have to unwind from that somehow."

As for unwinding from the road to hit the studio again, Houck says that he's feeling confident and excited to tackle another album. "Muchacho was the first one where I feel I almost got the sound that I wanted," he says. "I'm pretty stoked about pushing the thing and seeing where it goes." ◆

MONEY MATTERS

THIS YEAR, RESOLVE TO INVEST IN YOUR FUTURE.

THERE'S A LARGE COMPANY IN MY downtown building that employs hundreds of young people in their 20s. If three of them get onto the elevator, they're instantly checking their phones, not interacting with one another in any way. About a month ago, I began asking them on the elevator ride, "Where do you see yourself when you're 40?"

I always get one of two answers. One is, "I see myself working totally for myself." But there's rarely an idea of what that enterprise might be. It's just a vague answer, not even really a dream in most cases. The second answer is, "Where do I see myself when I'm 40? I don't even know where I'm going to be next week."

The good news is that the next several decades will see the largest transference of wealth—from the boomers to the younger population—of any in American history. The bad news is that there is enormous financial illiteracy among the millions who stand to inherit this wealth.

Since it's resolution time, and some of these resolutions may involve your money, I thought I'd share a few ideas for building long-term net worth. First, don't be a headline reader. The daily news, in my view, will be horrible every day for the rest of your lives. But for most of you, this bad news will have nothing to do with your lives or your careers. Screen it out. The phrase "don't be a headline reader" came to me not from some economist preaching from on high, but from an ironworker who worked steel 30 and 40 stories above ground. He was a voracious reader, admiring writers from Boston's George V. Higgins to Robert B. Parker. He knew about real life, not just theories and formulas created in college labs or by economists.

Along these lines, underscore for yourselves the emotional content behind the movements of stock markets. During the last several years, stock markets, particularly in the United States, have soared—but many people, looking in the rearview mirror with eyes on the meltdown in '08 through '09, remain deeply distrustful of the markets. There is nearly a generation of people who think nothing can ever be good again, and there is still some $2.7 trillion in money-market funds earning practically zero returns. Even Alan Greenspan, the former chairman of the Federal Reserve, now admits that he hadn't realized how much emotions factored into the magnitude of the fall.

Over three months last summer, I dined or drank and caroused with dozens of people, all across the economic spectrum. Not one of them mentioned the stock market to me. So markets are not a hot topic. In my opinion, anxiety still rules and greed is dormant. As long as this mood is dominant, I want to be invested still in the great global brands with rock-solid financial strength. And if I see markets moving lower for whatever reason the headlines trumpet, I will be a buyer.

If you are under 50 years old, please contribute to your retirement plans. Find a way to put something away for your future, even if it is in small amounts now. And go for growth, not into bonds. Invest in mutual funds, or invest in exchange-traded funds that emphasize blue-chip growth, that specialize in sectors with an out-of-favor contrarian bias or that specialize in specific sectors you feel have future promise.

In any market climate, there are always thriving areas. The same is true in your own lives. Believe in yourselves and keep putting it out there. We all long for the F word: freedom, in a financial sense. Take the long view and keep putting savings to work, particularly when times are fearful. And don't be a headline reader.

But if I'm an optimist about markets in 2014, when would I sell and take some money off the table? I would do it if there were signs that greed was rearing its ugly head. I would do it when the phones were ringing off the hook with people saying, "I can't wait to get into the stock market." No one is saying that to me. When they do, and markets become the game of the day, then I'll start being cautious and, again, a contrarian.

I think we are a long way from that. ◆

BUCKIN' BRONCO

A TALE OF DUCT TAPE, MACGYVER AND HEROIC MASCULINE INGENUITY

AS A MAN LIVING IN THE YEAR 2014, I recognize that I spend far too much time staring at screens. Fortunately, I have an antidote to virtual excesses. It's called the Bronco, and it regularly forces me to summon my frontiersman's instinct for survival. Trust me that your email inbox will be the last thing on your mind when you're driving a 5,000-pound machine that intermittently tries to kill you.

While modern vehicles flash error messages and command you to visit a dealer for an electronic colonic, the Bronco likes to fail in spectacularly analog fashion—say, you're fueling up at the pump and suddenly realize that your shoes are wet. Or, as happened most recently, the clutch linkage falls apart 40 miles from home. At rush hour. In heavy traffic.

This fun challenge occurs as I'm slowing for a yellow light, so I wrestle the shifter into neutral and enjoy a minute or so of icy panic as I wonder what I'll do when the light turns green. As we all know, the most reviled person on earth is the driver who sits immobile through an entire green light. If I don't get moving, there's a good chance that the lady behind me in the Audi will haul me from the driver's seat and beat me with a chain. As I'm contemplating how I'll fight her, the calm voice of MacGyver rings in my ear, telling me, "Turn off the engine. Put it in first gear. Use the starter to get it moving, and it might fire up." I don't know why '80s TV adventure-handyman MacGyver speaks to me in times of duress, but it is a power that I have and I'm thankful for it.

Per MacGyver's instructions, the Bronco starts in gear and I drive to the next turnoff, the parking lot for an Indian restaurant. Optimistically, I go inside and order a bunch of food. By the mullet of MacGyver, tonight I'm bringing home chicken tikka masala.

Back out at the truck, I crawl under the dash and discover that the problem is a small plastic piece. I don't want to get too deep into car jargon here, but this thingie connects these other two thingamaboppers. And the thingie has a big crack in it that caused it to fall out and make the other parts not touch each other good, so clutch no work. Sorry for the technical language, but there's no other way to explain it.

So, how do you fix a cracked piece of plastic? Eureka: You melt it back together. This seems like a great plan. I return to the restaurant and borrow a lighter to try to melt-weld my broken part. But I can't grip the plastic without scalding my fingers, so I grab a pair of pliers from the Bronco and hold the piece in place with those. Now I'm hunched over by the curb, holding a small white object with pliers while heating it with a lighter. Nothing suspicious to see here! Just a guy in the parking lot who looks like he's smoking crack. I'm a little worried that the restaurant proprietors will step outside to reprimand me, but evidently ordering $80 worth of naan and vindaloo gives you a temporary license to hit the pipe right there on the curb.

Appearances aside, I should've known this was a dumb idea since it came from my own internal monologue and not from MacGyver. And indeed, instead of morphing back into shape like the bad Terminator, the broken piece just sort of catches fire and disappears. Whoops. On the upside, I don't light anything else on fire.

Now I'm hunched over by the curb, holding a small white object with pliers while heating it with a lighter. Nothing suspicious to see here!

You might suggest that I need a AAA membership. Well, I have one. But it truly doesn't even occur to me to call a tow truck. The glory of safe return shall be mine alone. That is, with a little help from MacGyver, who asks, "You got any duct tape?" Stupid question, MacGyver. I'm driving a 1993 Bronco. Of course I have duct tape.

With an improvised duct tape tourniquet in place, the clutch pedal miraculously resumes its relationship with the clutch. I grab my food and text Heather that I've lashed everything back together and I'm hitting the road.

She texts back, "Is that safe?" I don't reply, because that's a stupid question. Of course it's not safe! I'm driving a giant truck laden with scalding-hot spicy food, and a crucial part of the vehicle is now made of duct tape. I've never felt so alive.

I make it home in time for dinner, flush with triumph and 10 percent more manly than I was when I left. As Jay-Z would say, I've got 99 problems but a clutch ain't one. Who wants some baingan bharta? Extra spicy. ◆

FORWARD THINKING

THE CELTICS VETERAN TALKS ABOUT TRADES, TRAVELING AND TD GARDEN GRUB.

CELTICS FORWARD JEFF GREEN, 27, WAS BORN AND RAISED in Maryland, where he led his high school to the state basketball title in 2004. He attended Georgetown University, where he was key to the Hoyas' upset victory over the undefeated Duke Blue Devils in 2006. He entered the NBA draft after his junior season in 2007 and was the fifth overall pick of the Celtics, who immediately traded him to the Seattle SuperSonics (now the Oklahoma City Thunder) for Ray Allen. He was traded back to Boston in 2011, but had to sit out the entire 2012 season after undergoing heart surgery. Later that year, he signed a four-year, $36 million contract. The forward scored a career high of 43 points in March of last year against the Miami Heat, and he went on to lead the team in scoring in the playoffs. He lives in Boston.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Do you think your last name made you predestined to play for the Celtics?
JEFF GREEN: [Laughs] In some way, yes. Green being the color of the Celtics, I think there's a way it all twisted together.

I went to Duke. Don't you think you owe me an apology for Jan. 21, 2006? No, I don't. But I'd like to say thank you to you for that one. That was a fun game. It put Georgetown back on the map, in my eyes, so I just want to say thank you again.

What are the chances the Hoyas and the Blue Devils will make the Final Four this year? Well, for the Hoyas, I think there's a great chance. The Blue Devils? I don't know. Both teams are great, so we'll just see.

Want to bet on it if they do? No. I'm not a betting man. We can watch the game together, though.

What is a Hoya? Good question. I guess a bulldog. That's what we represent, both in academics and sports. The fight of a bulldog.

I heard it comes from some Greek quote, but I like your answer better. How does it feel getting traded back and forth? It's not a good thing. It's tough, because you can never make one place your home, but it's the way things work, and you just have to be prepared to deal with it and make the best of it.

Oklahoma City vs. Boston? It's tough to compare. Boston is more of a city. Oklahoma has a slower pace. But it is growing rapidly. And the team is getting better.

Do you know Wyc Grousbeck's cocktail of choice? I do not. I haven't been in that type of setting with him.

It's rum, in case you want to buy him a present. Best swag you ever got? I guess the Euro swag. Everything fits well.

Any changes you'd like to see made to the Celtics uniform? No. I think it should always stay the same.

Do you have any old Seattle SuperSonics gear? I have a jersey. It's framed and hanging in my house in D.C.

"I watch 'em warm up prior to the game. When I'm not in the game, I try to stay focused, but they do distract me sometimes."

Any superstitions before a game? I do things a certain way, but nothing really superstitious. I listen to music at the same time and just try to relax.

Best coach in the NBA? Brad Stevens.

How about in the ACC? Mike Krzyzewski.

Good answer. What's the stupidest thing people say to someone who's 6-foot-9? There are so many. The most basic is "I can't believe you're that tall!" As if I had anything to do with it. Like I had some magic in me and said, "I have to be tall," and boom! I mean, you're lookin' at me. I guess you can believe it. Then there are things like, "How's the weather up there?"

Are your parents tall? I guess my dad is about average male height, but my mom is tall for a woman. She's 5-foot-11.

Best part of being 6-foot-9? You get to tower over everyone. You can see everybody in the crowd. You can reach things on a high shelf.

Do you have to duck down or slouch when you go to a movie theater? No. Not my problem. I bought my ticket just like you did. If you want to sit behind me, that's your fault.

Where do you find clothes that fit? I can find shirts at Barneys or Nordstrom. Pants are the problem. I don't think I've been able to buy a pair of pants in a store, so that's the tough part.

Favorite TD Garden snack? The Larry Bird sandwich. I forget which restaurant it's in, but it's good.

Do you ever pat Lucky the Leprechaun on the head for luck? No, but if it works, maybe I should start.

Teammate you most like to heckle? Keith Bogans.

Do you ever get distracted by the Celtics dancers? No. [Laughs] Yes, I do. I watch 'em warm up prior to the game. When I'm not in the game, I try to stay focused, but they do distract me sometimes.

Favorite city to travel to for a game? Los Angeles.

Least favorite? Salt Lake City.

Do you know all your stats by heart? No. I don't know any of them. I could probably give you an estimate, but that's about it.

Footwear of choice when you're not playing? Jordans.

Does the squeaking on the parquet ever get to you? No. It means you're doing something you love, working hard and doing well.

Finish this sentence: The Celtics do it_____. Better than any other NBA organization out there. ◆

CATCH MY DRIFT

BY EZRA DYER PHOTOGRAPHED BY JASON EVANS

THE EVENING BEFORE I HEAD TO THE TEAM O'NEIL Rally School in New Hampshire, O'Neil director of special projects Wyatt Knox tweets a photo of a rare steak next to a bottle of beer. The caption reads, "Spanking a supercar on ice in the morning, time to chow like a Viking." Meanwhile, somewhere down the road at the Common Man restaurant in Lincoln, I'm eating a salad that includes candied hazelnuts. If tomorrow I drive into a tree due to my dangerously low iron levels, I will curse myself for my un-Viking-like nutritional preparation.

The Team O'Neil Rally School is the coolest place in New England that you probably don't know about. Founded in 1997 by champion rally driver Tim O'Neil, the school is based at a 600-acre campus of gravel roads, carved into the craggy White Mountains not too far from where the Old Man's face fell off. O'Neil maintains its own fleet of cars—mostly Ford Fiestas, Audi 4000s and the most abused BMWs you've ever seen—but today I'm upping the ante with something a little different.

Like many of the O'Neil instruction cars, today's ride is an all-wheel-drive Audi. Unlike those hearty old tanks, this one has a 525-horsepower V10 bolted behind its two seats. The 2014 R8 V10 Spyder might look better suited to Miami than Franconia Notch, but with its Pirelli snow tires I'm confident that the sexy Estoril Blue R8 will climb an unplowed gravel road just as sure-footedly as the beater Subarus that are indigenous to this region. Of course, I've offered assurances that this exquisite $184,350 piece of machinery will not end up burrowed into the side of a mountain. And with Wyatt's expertise and my good judgment on our side, I'm 85 percent confident that it won't!

O'Neil offers instruction ranging from a basic $499 winter-driving course all the way to an advanced five-day course that runs about six grand. I contend that they're all bargains, given that the techniques you learn in the woods are the ones that best translate to real-world emergency situations. Rally driving takes place on real roads, often messy and unpaved, and thus incorporates plenty of improvisation—just like an actual drive home in any given blizzard. Sure, it's fun to learn the fast way around a dry racetrack, but memorizing the braking point for Turn 1 at Loudon probably won't help you much on your daily commute. Knowing how to coax your car out of a skid, though, damn well might.

Rally racing's cocktail of skill, danger and excitement seems to attract a particular kind of character. Wyatt, when he's not driving cars inadvisably quickly, always seems to be skiing Tuckerman or wrestling alligators or engaging in other macho outdoor activities. You get the idea that his daily routine doesn't involve a lot of Excel spreadsheets. Trevor Wert, who's also on hand to help us out today, is a professional ski jumper. And the last time I came here, eight years ago, I rode shotgun with a former fighter pilot who told me, "If I could have two hours with a beautiful woman, an F-14 or a rally car, I'd take the rally car." These guys make Ron Swanson look as tough as Michael Jackson.

Before we begin our lesson, we stop by an outpost near the skidpad and collect our helmets. I notice, up on the rafters, a collection of graffiti-smeared pink helmets. Wyatt explains that the pink lids are bestowed upon drivers who crash, like scarlet letters of inept car control. Lest you read the pink helmets as evidence that this is a boys' club, contrary evidence is just outside, in the form of competition cars driven by female racers. One of which is emblazoned with graphics that include a robot tyrannosaurus with lasers shooting out of its eyes. There must be something about sliding a car around on dirt that raises one's testosterone level, regardless of gender.

Dorky black helmets donned, we head out into the woods to the upper skidpad, where Wyatt will attempt to bestow some driving tips. The unplowed road glows bright white with fresh show, and as the temperature creeps up a thick fog sets in despite the strong sunshine. The sunny snowfog lends an otherworldly aura to the forest, the kind of hushed beauty that would've inspired Emerson to sit on a stump and compose a transcendentalist poem. Is not a car in motion, balanced on the knife-edge of adhesion, pistons beating and tires clawing, its own kind of poetry? It is, my good sir!

I know we're here to improve my driving skills, but as I gaze upon the open untracked expanse of the skidpad, I call an audible. First thing we do is some big donuts. Or rather, Wyatt does big donuts, drifting the Audi in a perfectly scribed arc while I stand in the middle and contemplate the total righteousness of a supercar powersliding across fresh New Hampshire snow. As Wyatt works the throttle and makes nuanced corrections with the steering wheel, the R8 dances past in a cloud of powder, its exhaust echoing off the hills. He rolls down the window and yells, "I'm not coming in! I'm gonna just keep going until it runs out of gas!"

Rally driving takes place on real roads, often messy and unpaved, and thus incorporates plenty of improvisation—just like an actual drive home in any given blizzard.

Next, it's my turn. With Wyatt in the passenger seat, I attempt to replicate the feat that he just made look so easy—keeping the car in a perpetual controlled slide.

Predictably, it does not go as well. I can only get halfway around, perhaps a little farther, before either going too fast and spinning out or going too slow and regaining traction. Being a dude, I naturally blame the car. "I feel like the all-wheel-drive system is sending power to the front sometimes and pulling me out of it," I say. Wyatt tactfully agrees that sure, that might be the problem. It just wasn't a problem when he was driving, for some reason. I'm like a golfer blaming my duffed tee shot on my new carbon-fiber Callaways.

From the skidpad we move to the slalom course. Here, we'll practice precisely timed transitions without undue worry that a wrong move will wrap a shapely German fender around a pine tree. Wyatt demonstrates how to use the brakes to transfer weight forward to the front tires, followed by quick countersteering as the now-unloaded rear end swings around behind you. Doing this once is easy and even natural. Executing it five or so times in tight succession requires you to understand the physics behind what you're doing. Because if you goof up the first or second turn, your error can compound itself until you're completely out of control by the final turns. That's how I once slid a Lamborghini into a field next to an airport runway, but that's another story.

Riding with Wyatt through the slalom, we're going so fast that the wind beats on my face through my side window (oh, and we've also put the top down, as Thoreau would want). When I'm at the wheel we don't go that fast, but within a few tries I'm navigating successfully through the complete slalom. The Audi, although all-wheel-drive, tends to send most of its power to the rear wheels, which means that I can steer with the gas pedal the same way I did with the two-wheel-drive pickup I drove during my formative winters in Maine. This is not, I should point out, the O'Neil-approved way to do things. But I'm getting the job done and demonstrating sufficient competence that Wyatt deems me ready for my day's graduation exam: departing the obstacle-free safety of the skidpad and throwing this piece of metal down a real road. One with ditches. And trees. Adding to my stress level, Wyatt will shadow me in one of O'Neil's Audis, a 1984 4000 Quattro that looms in my rearview mirror like a stern schoolmarm raring to whack my knuckles with a ruler.

> It is deeply satisfying and cathartic to pitch a car sideways, catch it and then continue unabated at high speed through a majestic forest wonderland.

With Wyatt no longer sitting alongside and doling out tips, I'll have to figure this out for myself. We steer down onto a road beneath the skidpad to set up for a hilly section that climbs back up toward the slalom. I have a walkie-talkie clipped to the console, and I hear Wyatt's voice crackle, "We're coming in hot," advising anyone else in the area that it's officially a bad time to wander onto this particular road.

Would you believe that I made a perfect ascent on the very first try? Then I won't disabuse you of that lovely notion. Let's just leave it at the fact that the car never went off the road, and on my final attempt I nailed it so thoroughly that my exclamations of triumph rang out from Presque Isle to St. Johnsbury. It is deeply satisfying and cathartic to pitch a car sideways, catch it and then continue unabated at a high speed through a majestic forest wonderland. I can see why this line of work attracts fighter pilots and ski jumpers, people who have rather high expectations for excitement.

Wyatt, for his part, says that bottomless O'Neil adrenaline spigot has rendered him a serene driver on the street. "I used to drive like an asshole," he says. "I got lots of tickets. But you get it out of your system up here, so you don't feel like you want to drive like that on the street. People tell me now that I drive like a grandma."

With dusk falling, I soon bid farewell and point the R8 south on Interstate 93. Wyatt's right—I don't feel any compulsion to answer the challenge of the occasional Volkswagen driver who bombs past me at 85 mph. All my usual aggressive driving inclinations are thoroughly purged from my system. I could go for a steak, though. Drive like a grandma, chow like a Viking. ◆

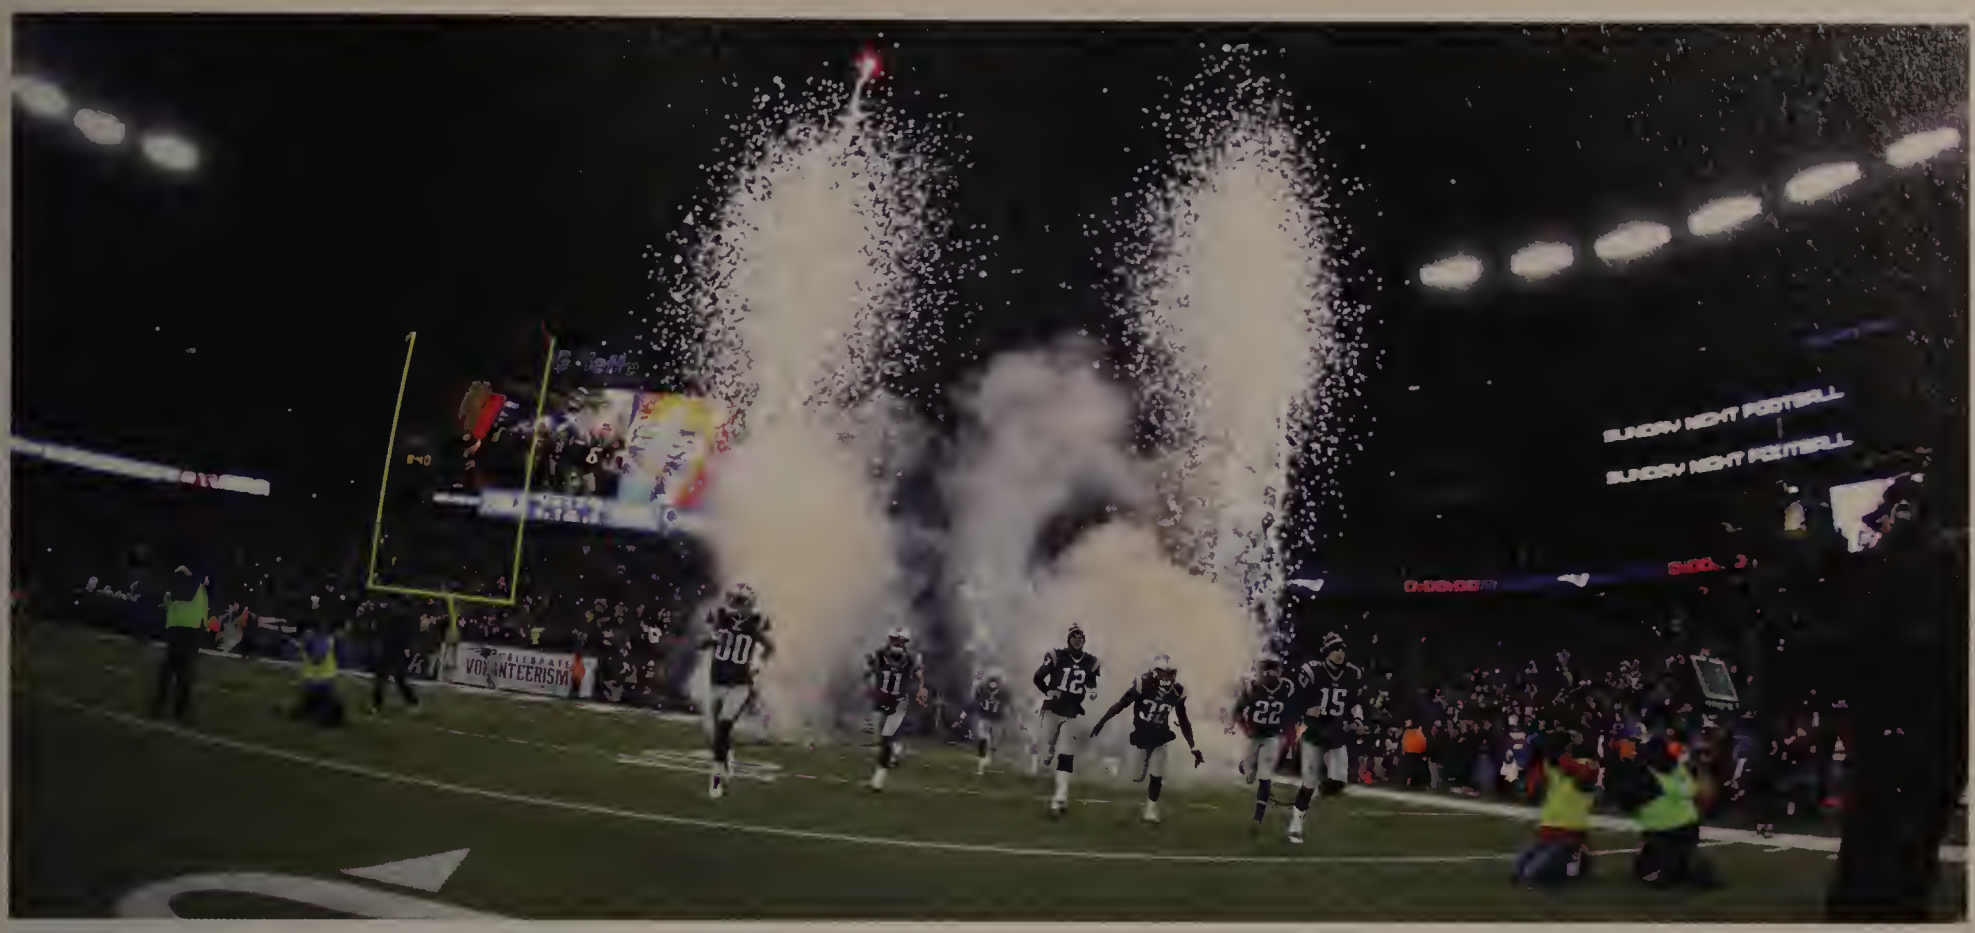
BRAVING THE ELEMENTS

A BEHIND-THE-SCENES LOOK AT FOUR DIRTY WATER JOBS

They make our city tick in ways we take for granted. They do the dangerous work that others avoid. But what drives these pros besides adrenaline? We dug deep to find out.

— BY SCOTT KEARNAN —



THE BLAZE OF GLORY

IT'S THE NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS' high-stakes playoffs game against the Indianapolis Colts.

PETER PHOTOGRAPHY, COURTESY OF ATLAS PYROVISION PRODUCTIONS

Shielded by an umbrella from lashing rain, a singer standing at Gillette Stadium's 50-yard line is about to belt a soaring stanza of "The Star-Spangled Banner." And on the field's sidelines, Matt Shea prepares for his cue. "I like to hit it at the 't' in 'rockets,'" he explains—his hand not on a microphone, but on a switch in a lap-sized electric control panel. "That's when they have the biggest effect."

Sure enough, as soon as the "rockets' red glare" is heralded, the switch is thrown, and streaming bolts of crimson fireworks shoot up from the field like bombs bursting in air. It's a perfectly timed play. The crowd goes wild.

Shea lives to hear those cheers. "At the end of the day, we're in the entertainment business," says Shea, who left a career in radio for the pyrotechnics industry about 20 years ago. Today, he's vice president of the New Hampshire-based Atlas PyroVision Productions, which produces 800 dazzling displays annually, from Boston's Fourth of July celebration to First Night, rock concerts and sporting events. There are 25 full-time employees and 700 project-based part-timers—hobbyists drawn, like Shea, to the thrill of exciting an audience.

Hours are long, liabilities many, expectations big and glory little. But pumping up crowds is Shea's passion, so when Tom Brady and Co. rush onto the field during introductions, his team sets off the fireworks fountains—"gerbs" in industry-speak—announcing their arrival. They also make the weather-contingent decision about whether it's safe to set off huge plumes mere feet from the athletes.

Safety is strong in modern pyro, says Shea, who designs productions weeks in advance. Mortar racks (crates full of hollow upright pipes) are stuffed with wired explosives and ignited from a switchboard by technicians who refer to a script of cues and a map outlining pyro placements, like coaches reviewing a clipboard. It's challenging (two words: live TV) and often expensive. At Gillette games, with spectators at close quarters, Atlas must use special low-smoke, high-precision pyrotechnics that might cost as much as an entire municipal display on July Fourth.

Regulations weren't always so strict, says Dick McDowell, Atlas' "old-timer" with more than 40 years of experience. At age 10, a shovel was thrust in his face before fireworks in his Ayer hometown. "They asked me if I liked to dig holes," chuckles McDowell, who proudly obliged the orders and took his post with the big shots. "I felt like King Tut." A love for the industry was born, and not even a mortar-rack mishap that shot 16 steel fragments into his leg could dampen it.

But his most rewarding thrill? Not movie effects for The Departed, not a Fenway concert for the Rolling Stones. "Fireworks for the Special Olympics," McDowell says. "They brought me into the gym afterward for a round of applause." Touchdown.

THE FREEDOM OF THE SEA

"YOU DON'T MAKE A TON OF MONEY," Anthony Pucci admits of his work. That's OK. Pucci has something that he prizes above all else: independence. "When I wake up in the morning, my biggest worry is, how many will I bait?"

In a tough environment, Pucci survives as a commercial lobsterman—the only one still based in East Boston, he says, though he's been working boats since age 13 and remembers when the shipyard was flush. (Now most sail out from South Boston.) Three years ago, tired of taking orders as a construction worker, he saved paychecks and purchased a lobsterman's license. The draw? "Freedom," Pucci says. "If it fails, it's my own fault."

An entrepreneurial spirit also attracted Tony Carli to the business. "My wife jokes that I have the two jobs every 6-year-old boy wants," laughs Carli, a captain in Everett's fire department and owner and operator of Boston Lobster Tours, which runs 75-minute outings that allow small private groups to "catch and keep" their own. Though lobstermen are private and cagey about their competitive work, Carli's pal Pucci showed him the ropes. Carli's not looking to make lobstering his livelihood, but to "give insight into the history and importance" of the trade to his guests, who spend $225 per group for a chance to catch their own Bahston hahba' lobsta'. Plus, it's an excuse for the Coast Guard vet to indulge his love for open water.

"Even this time of year, it's a beautiful place to be," Carli says, filling his lungs with wintry air as we cruise out from Eastie. Insert: poetic waxing about man, mere drop in an expansive ocean. "It's freeing. It [lobstering] is a very solitary business."

Expensive, too. Licenses, boats and other overhead push lobstering startup costs to the $40,000-$100,000 range. Like red oil, lobster prices fluctuate with the market, and though some lobstermen sell directly to restaurants, most use brokers whose relationships move product even in low-demand seasons.

That's assuming you get a good catch. Averaging a half-pound per trap is strong, says Pucci, who in the summer baits and sets 400 traps per day, about five days a week. (He leaves the house by 5 am.) How soon are they hauled in? That's an "industry secret," I'm told, based on an individual lobsterman's analysis of geography, weather, tides and more.

Indeed, on the unforgiving open water, everything comes down to quick thinking and instinct. "I froze for a second. I didn't know what to do," Pucci says, remembering one wooden boat that lost a plank in the middle of the harbor. So he pulled up to Gallops Island, ripped the door off the boat's cabin and, coupling it with a lifejacket, nailed it down like a Band-Aid. He might be going it alone now, but at least those construction skills came in handy.

GETTING THEIR HANDS DIRTY

IT'S NEARLY 1:30 AM, and word comes on the radio that the last Red Line subway car has cleared the tracks for the night. Immediately, a different schedule springs into action.

Finally green-lit, three gear-toting track workers pile into a rickety yellow cab that only appears after-hours—a cramped, lightless MBTA "work train" filled with oil-streaked equipment. The urban submarine chugs through darkness from a sprawling Southie bus yard to the JFK/UMass station, where sub-zero temps have cracked a rail. Service must resume in four hours (otherwise, cue the "T sucks!" tweets from morning commuters).

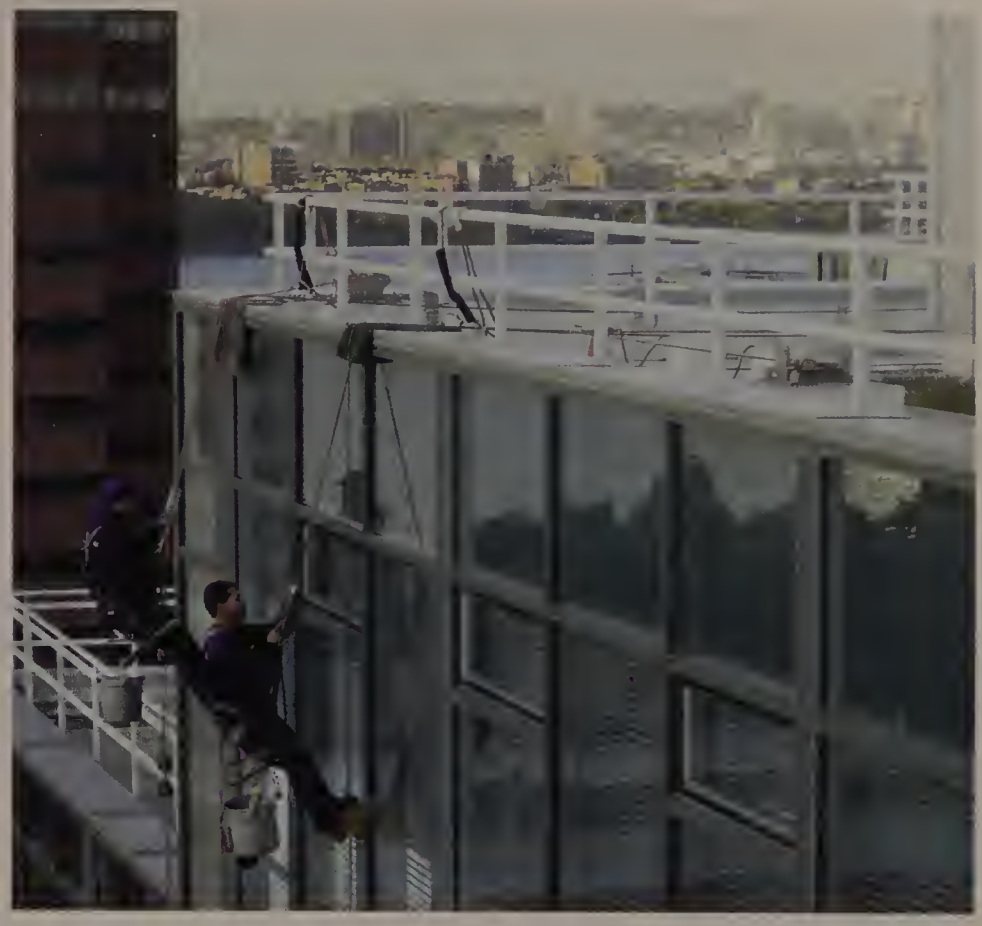
En route there's much good-natured joking: about kids, dogs, one another. Then the guys hop off and start moving like well-oiled gears. Sledgehammers knock metal clips off the broken rail. A crane hoists its replacement. Foreman John McGrath throws constant words of caution to me, the amateur interloper. (I had to pass an eight-hour training course to even get this close.) "Look away!" he barks. Blinding white light jumps from a panel as he kills the power to the electrified third rail. "Step over it anyway," he cautions, though I've just watched him test it. Earplugs and goggles are thrust into my hands, and a worker takes a circular saw to the tracks, slicing slowly as if through mud. Metal screams and a chest-high flurry of sparks flies. I'm suddenly grateful for the guidance.

"We're a team here," McGrath explains. "We have to watch out for each other." I remember a sign back at the bus yard, requesting donations for a sick worker.

MBTA maintenance is dangerous: Take heavy machinery and load-bearing infrastructure, and then add 600 volts of electricity, the pressures of an overnight time crunch and, potentially, moving trains to the mix. "Our goal is to go home to our families" was a frequent refrain during the intensive safety class, which also dispelled oft-heard urban legends. (No, you can't save yourself by laying low between tracks.)

That's what cultivates the unique camaraderie, says MBTA's Danny Payne, who supervises track maintenance teams. Payne picks me up from the JFK/UMass station for a subterranean tour of the tunnels at Porter Square, which at 130 feet below surface is one of the world's deepest subway stations. As the service truck crawls down the endless earthen corridor, a group of orange-vest-clad workers climb out of the way and offer a salute that seems quite cheery for three in the morning. There's another city down here, with its own streets and sense of civic duty.

"We're in the business of moving people," Payne says as we pull into the station. "And we take great pride in doing that together."



FEELING ON TOP OF THE WORLD

"THAT DAY I WAS THE TALLEST GUY IN BOSTON," Stanley Standrick recalls with a smirk. "It made me feel good."

Standrick is about 6-foot-1. Not short, certainly, especially standing next to me—yet hardly a noteworthy height. But he's reflecting on a day when he stood nearly 800 feet up, washing the wide glass windows of the 62-floor John Hancock Tower, the tallest building in Boston.

The 31-year-old is one of 40 employees of PureView, a Chelsea-based company that is New England's top dog of commercial high-rise cleaning. They service 125 buildings, including Boston's biggest—the Hancock, the Pru, the State Street building—plus smaller but still-mighty icons like the Museum of Fine Arts. Window cleaning is the bread and butter, but services include waterproofing, restoration, even installing bird wire. If it keeps the Hub's cityscape sparkling and postcard-pretty, they do it.

For obvious reasons, it's dangerous work. Though PureView is a polished and professional player, Standrick says the industry is full of fly-by-night companies that rush inexperienced guys through hazardous jobs. He attempted his first "drop" (one pass down a building) as a last-minute fill-in for a sick friend. With no training, he clambered over the edge of the building with his equipment incorrectly fastened. On his second novice drop, he says, "I just froze." But he managed to hoist himself out of his chair and back onto the building.

That's unusual, because when systems are working correctly, there's one way off: down. They're based on "friction-controlled descent," explains Sergio Serpa, PureView's director of health and safety. His workers use two ropes, a main line and a safety, designed to support 8,000 pounds—about the weight of two cars. Carrying 60-plus pounds of equipment, workers trudge to the roof in full-body harnesses and attach themselves to fixed anchor points welded to the building. (They even stay attached while on the roof, if within six feet of the ledge, to protect themselves from sudden microburst winds.) Once they're dropping, gravity pulls the rope slowly through a brake series; workers can "tie off" for a temporary halt to clean six-foot spans of glass. (It's unsafe to reach any farther.) Every tool is tethered—a wet sponge is a weapon if dropped from 800 feet—and it's a slow process: It takes two workers a total of two months of eight-hour days to clean all four sides of the Hancock.

Now Standrick loves his job. (And is one of the company's best, Serpa says.) He takes pride in making his city shine, enjoys the fringe benefits of the occasional X-rated show (close your blinds, people!) and, most of all, likes feeling on top of the world.

"The attention we get is amazing," Standrick says. "In some of these buildings, you have these multi-millionaire lawyers. But they look at us and say, 'You couldn't pay me enough to do that. I respect what you do.' "

METRO BOSTON'S AUSPICIOUS GUIDE TO ENTERTAINMENT, CULTURE AND HORSING AROUND

AGENDA for 1/22–2/4

Stirrup the Fun

Over the Moon

WITH THE 2014 NEW Year's Day already come and gone, the upcoming Chinese year 4712 seems ahead of its time. To honor the year of the horse, the Peabody Essex Museum is celebrating with a Lunar New Year festival, a day of dancing, film and crafts that fortunately isn't emceed by Ryan Seacrest. Chinese tradition has it that people born in a certain year may have similar personality traits to a corresponding animal, with the horse representing those who are energetic, perceptive and intelligent (lucky them!). Fortunately, there are no required characteristics for the museum's event—all are welcome. On Feb. 1, revelers can explore the hidden symbols in a silk robe, perform their own lion dance or even horse around in a martial-arts workshop. / Jemma Douglas

PERFORMING ARTS

Edited by Hannah Sheinberg

PURPLE PLIGHT In her lead role in SpeakEasy Stage Company's production of The Color Purple, local R&B artist Lovely Hoffman has plenty of reasons to sing the blues. Based on Alice Walker's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, the Tony-nominated musical begins in the early 1900s in rural Georgia, where 14-year-old Celie has been twice impregnated by her father. Married off to an older man and separated from Nettie, her beloved sister, Celie survives years of harrowing racism, abuse and heartache, but manages to find hope and her own voice. See Celie's true colors through Feb. 8 at the Boston Center for the Arts' Calderwood Pavilion. / Frankie Barbato

BLOODY GOOD Long before Twihards roamed the earth, a caped bloodsucker took the first bite out of the vampire genre. Hungarian actor Bela Lugosi gives life to the archetypal vampire in Dracula, the 1931 horror film that follows a sinister count's thirst-quenching travels from his Transylvanian castle to the busy streets of London. Lugosi, who first played Count Dracula on Broadway in 1927, makes the blood-loving beast look eerily human in this classic adaptation of Bram Stoker's 1897 novel. Catch all the lies, lust and bite marks on Jan. 24 during the Dead of Winter series at the Brattle Theatre. / Abagail Sullivan

Reviews by Sean Burns

12 Years a Slave ★★★★ Despite being adapted by screenwriter John Ridley from Solomon Northup's own 1853 memoir, the astonishing 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have seen movies about the horrors of slavery before. But this one is about the mechanics. It is about process. Director Steve McQueen actually downplays the brutality of plantation life, all things considered. 12 Years a Slave merely asks you to meet its level gaze and accept the fact that all this actually happened. Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this cruel and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? Don't look away. (In the suburbs.)

American Hustle ★½ A gaudy spectacle of egregious overacting and silly wig humor, writer-director David O. Russell's indulgent riff on the FBI's "Abscam" sting operation is the year's biggest embarrassment. Christian Bale hems, haws and makes a lot of De Niro faces as a con-artist dry-cleaning magnate suckered by Bradley Cooper's overzealous agent into setting up a crooked New Jersey mayor (Jeremy Renner). With the overlapping narration tracks, freeze frames, classic-rock soundtrack and cascading camera moves, Russell proves that not only has he seen Goodfellas and Casino, but that he liked them an awful lot. The ins and outs of the grifts aren't particularly interesting, so American Hustle ramps up a contrived love story with Bale and Cooper bickering for the affections of Amy Adams' duplicitous bad girl, who adopts a phony British accent and refuses to wear bras. Jennifer Lawrence eats scenery as Bale's harpy wife, once again stuck in a part for which she is at least 10 years too young. Everybody's miscast and overcompensating, while Russell's directorial karaoke comes off as Scorsese for dummies. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Anchorman 2: The Legend Continues ★★ Aren't comedy sequels the worst? Since you liked all those jokes the first time around, why not hear them again? Much in the way that increasingly diminished returns squashed whatever fond memories we had of the first Austin Powers and Hangover pictures, Will Ferrell and co-writer/director Adam McKay trot out numbskull newscaster Ron Burgundy for a victory lap through all those old quotes that obnoxious drunk people have been shouting at you in bars ever since the underperforming 2004 original became a cult hit. There's a nifty satirical idea here, as our moron correspondent decides that the news is too boring and sets the template for 24-hour cable stations by focusing exclusively on car chases, pets and empty patriotic slogans. Unfortunately, like every other idea in the movie, it's woefully underdeveloped, leaving the unseemly 112-minute running time to be padded out with non sequiturs and unstructured improv sessions that go nowhere. Top-heavy with pointless celebrity cameos, Anchorman 2 mistakes recognition for humor. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

August: Osage County ★★ Playwright Tracy Letts' honored opus is a cracker Eugene O'Neill riff hopped up on prescription meds and whiskey. It crams 10 or so members of the wildly dysfunctional Weston family into a sweltering, tiny space for all sorts of simultaneous outré revelations and profane recriminations. This literal hothouse ran for more than three hours every night on Broadway to both acclaim and exhaustion. Alas, awards have a way of ruining everything, and thus a severely truncated and defanged August: Osage County is now being presented to movie audiences with an all-star cast as a collection of Academy-friendly "For Your Consideration" meltdown clips. What played as a free-for-all cacophony upon the stage is flattened out by John Wells' pedestrian direction. Almost everyone not named Meryl Streep is pretty terrific in this picture, but that hour and change shorn from Letts' original script leaves most of these performers scrambling to define their characters without the writer's ammunition. Most of this movie feels like it was left on the cutting room floor. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Grudge Match ★★½ I'm not sure anybody ever really wondered what might happen if Rocky Balboa fought Jake LaMotta. The winner of the Cold War vs. cinema's most inarticulate wife beater hardly seems like a selling point, save that Sylvester Stallone and Robert De Niro both played boxers a long time ago and have seen better days, career-wise. This mediocre time killer casts the two raging prunes as septuagenarian rivals encouraged to put the gloves on again after a public scuffle goes viral on YouTube. When they last faced off in 1997's Cop Land, Stallone improbably acted circles around De Niro, coming in underneath the latter's broad, jokey performance with a genuinely affecting sweetness. The same thing happens again here, as the two vie for the affections of a shockingly well-preserved Kim Basinger. Alan Arkin is on hand to run through his patented profane grandpa routine, while Kevin Hart keeps the energy up with a volley of obvious ad-libs. Grudge Match isn't much of a movie, but you can do worse. Both of these stars certainly have. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Her ★★★★ We all spend too much time with our smartphones, but Joaquin Phoenix falls hard for Siri in this one-joke movie that blossoms into something of a miracle. Written and directed by Being John Malkovich and Where the Wild Things Are savant Spike Jonze, Her is a tender and ruefully funny meditation on modern relationships and what it means to love in a world where we're all in constant communication, yet seemingly lonelier than ever. The film is set in a quasi-futuristic Apple Store Los Angeles, where sentient operating systems work as personal secretaries. Samantha (voiced in an astounding performance by Scarlett Johansson) takes a shine to Phoenix's awkward, introverted Theodore, and the two develop a chemistry that's all the more remarkable because she never actually appears onscreen. Her is almost overstuffed with philosophical musings on the role of technology in the way we live now. But in its big aching heart, it's a love story, and a great one. Relationships end and people grow apart, even when they live inside your phone. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games: Catching Fire ★★ 1/2 What a difference a director makes. When we last caught up with Katniss Everdeen, she was reluctantly killing kids in Seabiscuit helmer Gary Ross' aesthetically ugly, sloppily staged adaptation of Suzanne Collins' young-adult megaseller. One year and a few hundred million dollars later, this series has fallen into the hands of filmmaker Francis Lawrence, of I Am Legend and the underrated Constantine fame. Lawrence has an eye for striking visuals but has never found a script to match his talent. He doesn't find one here either, but Catching Fire is still a huge improvement over its predecessor in nearly every way. Jennifer Lawrence's Katniss is back, shouldering the burden of martyrdom in a future dystopia where the rich enlist the poor to kill each other off in televised spectacles. Pulpy melodrama continues apace, but this time around with lush, burnished images and a budget to match the ambition. It's quite engrossing until the movie abruptly stops midscene, teasing another sequel coming soon to a theater near you. Sigh, the perils of franchise maintenance. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Inside Llewyn Davis ★★★★ My favorite movie in years is the Coen brothers' most melancholic reverie, ditching their usual clockwork plotting for a loosey-goosey drift through a rotten week in the life of an itinerant troubadour skirting around the edges of the Greenwich Village scene in 1961. Oscar Isaac's Llewyn Davis is living hand-to-mouth without even a winter coat. Sharp, sour and more than a little bit of a dick, Llewyn is couch-surfing across Washington Square while pompously asserting his folk-singer superiority (Isaac strums a bunch from the Dave Van Ronk songbook, quite wonderfully). As the bleak, semi-surreal collection of anecdotes proceeds from bad to worse with the filmmakers' patented precision, the deadpan indifference of the Coens' cruel universe has never been so deeply felt, so soulfully sung or more mordantly hilarious. Bending itself into a Möbius strip of back-alley beatdowns, Inside Llewyn Davis is a movie for acerbic also-rans shat upon by life—a salute to all the people who never made it. It's a triumphant ode to failure. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Lone Survivor ★★ Good intentions don't always make good movies. The story goes that director Peter Berg agreed to the indignity of directing Battleship, just so long as the studio agreed to fund this bruising, bloody tribute to Navy SEALs fighting in Afghanistan. Working from Marcus Luttrell's memoir (the title of which is a huge spoiler), the film follows four guys stranded in Taliban territory, shooting it out for some 50-odd minutes of screen time in a blow-by-blow account of an operation gone wrong. Lone Survivor means well, but is unbearably dull. Mark Wahlberg, Ben Foster and Emile Hirsch strangle their wild screen personas as interchangeable embodiments of all that is stoic and decent about America. Only Berg's Friday Night Lights discovery Taylor Kitsch is allowed a personality, so of course he doesn't stick around long. The movie ignores geopolitical context in favor of long, slow-motion sequences of heroes dying noble deaths to an overwrought electric guitar score by Explosions in the Sky. By the end it feels like a recruiting ad in which everybody dies. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Nebraska ★★ Everything about Nebraska, Alexander Payne's sixth feature and first stinker, feels secondhand. It's a gimmicky sitcom script gussied up with self-consciously "artful" affectations borrowed from the New Hollywood heyday of the early '70s. Except it doesn't even get those right. The picture's entire aesthetic design comes off like a wise-ass kid dressing up in his cool uncle's old clothes and wearing them wrong. The terminally bland Will Forte stars as a stereo salesman who takes a road trip with his gruff, alcoholic father (Bruce Dern), who thinks he's won a million dollars from a Publishers Clearing House-type sweepstakes letter he recently got in the mail. There's a tension between Dern's crumbling old-school masculinity and Forte's modern-guy ineffectualness that goes maddeningly unexplored. It's just really boring and sad. The pacing is so gummed up by homages to The Last Picture Show that if you removed all the shots of deteriorating storefronts, this 115-minute film would barely be feature length. Despite the ostentatious visual scheme and constant callbacks to cinematic giants, Nebraska feels flatter than the landscapes it depicts. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

The Past ★★★ As you might recall from 2011's Oscar-winning A Separation, Iranian filmmaker Asghar Farhadi's family dramas unfold in a classical, patient tradition punctuated by bombshell revelations—sort of like if Ibsen or Chekhov wrote mystery novels. His latest, The Past, transplants the action to Paris, where The Artist's Bérénice Bejo awaits the arrival of her estranged husband (Ali Mosaffa). After four years of minimal contact, these two are supposed to be finally getting a divorce so she can marry her new beau (Tahar Rahim, from A Prophet). As in Farhadi's previous picture, nothing is quite as it appears on the surface. Information is parceled out gradually, so we're left to puzzle over strange emotional exchanges as a bigger, thornier picture only slowly becomes clear. There's a lot more than meets the eye going on in this household, too much maybe. But even as his plot teeters into melodrama, the filmmaker keeps tight control of the formal compositions and deftly underplayed performances. Expanding in scope as it goes along, the movie grows on you. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Saving Mr. Banks ★½ Purporting to be the true story of how Walt Disney convinced uptight author P.L. Travers to let him adapt her precious Mary Poppins books for the big screen, Saving Mr. Banks is a steaming plate of corporate propaganda with a side of character assassination. It's also a movie about a contract negotiation, and about as interesting as that sounds. Though in real life she was reportedly a bar-crawling bisexual single mother, the film presents Travers as a miserable spinster played by a tut-tutting Emma Thompson, who seems to be channeling the host of Weakest Link. Tom Hanks' twinkly Uncle Walt not only wins her over with whimsy, but also therapeutically resolves Travers' issues about her long-dead alcoholic father (well played by Colin Farrell in flashbacks) until tears and soppy music ensue. Saving Mr. Banks advocates artists selling out to a corporation that always knows best. Hanks smuggles in a few grace notes of prickly determination in a movie that's otherwise an infomercial for the company that produced it. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Secret Life of Walter Mitty ★★ Full of fortune-cookie wisdom about living your dreams, this years-in-the-making labor of love for director-star Ben Stiller undercuts the pious sermons with so much product placement I kept reaching for the remote to try to fast-forward through the commercials. Unfortunately, you can't do that in a movie theater. Stiller plays a sad-sack everyman on the verge of losing his job at Life magazine after misplacing a cover photo by a legendary war correspondent. For reasons that don't make much sense, Stiller ends up running all over Greenland, Iceland and Afghanistan and learning how to become a better person or something. The movie is beautifully photographed, well-directed and utterly inane. It's difficult to build momentum when characters won't stop shilling for eHarmony and Papa John's, and the film bottoms out when Patton Oswalt drops by to extol the virtues of Cinnabon. I also had a hard time sitting still for a condescending lecture about risk-taking from Stiller, Hollywood royalty who never had to get a job. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Wolf of Wall Street ★★★★ An obscenity, an abomination and the movie this country deserves right now. Martin Scorsese's epic assault on propriety and good taste stars Leonardo DiCaprio as stockbroker scumbag Jordan Belfort, one of the countless who looted the American Dream and gagged on the spoils of wretched excess. It's another Scorsese gangster picture, only this time it's white-collar and played out as a broad, bilious farce. Pumped up with adrenaline and cocaine, the picture blasts off like a rocket ship into such a frenzied orgy of sex, drugs and decadence that both Hunter S. Thompson and Federico Fellini might consider it a bit much. The Wolf of Wall Street zings at warp speed from one fiendishly entertaining, appalling set-piece to another, until the movie's gargantuan three-hour running time reveals Scorsese's moral severity. It's all too much too-much-ness about people for whom too much was never enough. The grotesque excess becomes deadening and the emptiness chilling. DiCaprio is fearlessly smarmy, Jonah Hill makes a revolting sidekick, and they heroically debase themselves in the funniest, angriest movie of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

KARMIN KALLING

After grabbing diplomas from Berklee, Karmin's Amy Heidemann and Niek Noonan graduated to the big leagues. They started out combining talents for school projects, banging on a wooden box when they couldn't afford a drum kit. Then the pop duo rose from YouTube cover artists to Billboard sensations with 2012's "Brokenhearted," an upbeat hit that riffs on the now-engaged couple's first meeting. Now they're gearing up for the March release of their first full-length album, Pulses. Get a taste when Karmin bring powerhouse vocals, spitfire rhymes and sunny beats to their former home base on Feb. 4 at Paradise Rock Club. / Frankie Barbato

MUSEUMS & GALLERIES

Edited by Sarah Hagman

girl scouts of eastern massachusetts

So yummy and so good for the community

All Girl Scout cookies have a mission

Whether selling Thin Mints, Caramel deLites, or another of eight delicious flavors, a girl gains skills and confidence from running her own business, interacting with customers, and working with her peers.

And it's about the importance of giving back

Tell a Girl Scout you want to support Cookies for a Cause, and we will donate the cookies you purchase to a soldier overseas or a local food bank. While you're at it, treat yourself to a box!

Girl Scout cookies are available until March 4.

SECRET SERVICE

It's a battle of the sexes in Alex Myers' Revolutionary. Inspired by Deborah Samson's real-life journey from indentured servant to soldier, this debut novel imagines the inner life of the Massachusetts woman who disguised herself as a man and served in the Continental Army. Myers uses his fictive gifts to fill the gaps of history, drawing on his experience as a transgender man to tell a story of secrecy, courage and gender bending. Learn about this master of disguise on Jan. 31 at the Harvard Book Store. / Abagail Sullivan

Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England backyard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hardwood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with coworkers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Meditcrranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

LET THEM EAT SUGARPLUMS

An unwrapped toy, in exchange for free-flowing vodka cocktails and delicious little nibbly things? Sounds good to us, and apparently to the lively crew of bright young things who gathered on the second floor of Cafeteria for the Hump Day Holiday Party.

No one was actually seen humping (turns out that's a reference to Wednesday), but the second annual fundraiser for the Massachusetts Coalition for the Homeless, organized by preppy Pee-wee reboot Sean William Donovan, did attract the likes of Equinox Adonis Chad Flahive and his devastatingly handsome other half, Patrick Weiss, erudite English professor Carol-Ann Farkas, Mad Men Dick Carroll and Enrique Graber (spotted in a lip-lock), DJ Brek.One (who provided the soundtrack), the suspiciously blond Christopher Peirce Snow, nightlife and dating blogger Karyn Polewaczyk, purveyor of Waspy trappings Matthew Tara, interior-design avatar Stephanie Rossi, the uber-lovely Cordy Elkins, and a few party crashers who arrived sans toys and schnorred on the passed hors d'oeuvres and signature cocktails while enjoying the wintry view of Newbury Street.

Nevertheless, it was still early by the time the toy drive table was as overflowing as Santa's sleigh, and whether it was the chill outside or Tito's Handmade Vodka, everyone's cheeks were aglow with good cheer.

Not far from the bar, the following exchange actually took place: "The fried mac 'n' cheese is magically delicious."

"You mean sinfully delicious. Only frosted Lucky Charms are magically delicious."

Meanwhile, the award for the evening's most clueless remark goes to the person who didn't stop to consider that, at a benefit for homeless children, it was in questionable taste to say, "I felt kind of silly buying a toy—I mean, all kids want these days are apps for their iPads, right?"

BLACK-TIE IS THE NEW ORANGE

There's something auspicious-sounding about "the 69th annual," and the Winter Ball, held in the ballroom of the Boston Park Plaza, didn't disappoint.

A benefit for Discovery Ensemble, the evening has morphed from a debutante ball into an all-inclusive pre-Christmas blowout, with a crowd that runs the gamut from A-gays to B-boys, all dressed in black-tie and gowns down to the ground.

Among the slinky crowd: the whiskey-voiced Smoki Bacon and her dapper other half, Dick Concannon, keeping an eye on their daughter and son-in-law, Hilary and Chris Gabrieli, who were dancing with their offspring, John and Abigail, who brought along about 25 of their classmates from Harvard, who proved that looks do count. Then there was Cary Grant impersonator CJ Menard, smoking-hot Red Cross head honcho Jarrett Barrios, the unfairly attractive Liz and Mike Fish, newlyweds Kyle and Greg Hemingway Dickinson, ubiquitous hipsters Paul Karger and Pamela Vargas, Bond girl Tatiana Webb, the naturally effervescent Chynna Pope, North Shore notable John Rando, professional bachelor Pierce Harman, MIT homologous recombinator (whatever that means) Jenny Kay, the intimidatingly Aryan Erik Schubert and Joe Schutt, and numerous dazzling others, who listened to a string quartet perform before packing the dance floor and tripping the light fantastic.

"I felt kind of silly buying a toy—I mean, all kids want these days are apps for their iPads, right?"

There were several conversations about Cartagena, Colombia (one couple was going for New Year's, another had been there for New Year's three years ago, and another is getting married there next month), while one man, when asked how he knew the woman he was with, said, "I went out with her roommate back when I still dated girls."

However, that was topped when a beautiful blond journalist was asked how she knew a respected oncologist at Dana-Farber. Without missing a beat, she said, "Prison." ◆

COOKED UP

IF YOU WERE A 19TH-CENTURY BOSTONIAN visiting one of those newfangled restaurants, you might call it by a different name—a "restorator," a local idiom that has long since fallen from the lexicon but that I find rather lovely. Dining out is my favorite form of indulgence, a mini-vacation from the daily grind, a treat that's often truly restorative (even if I sometimes feel like I need a wheelbarrow to haul me home afterward). But the elemental pleasure of a great meal is one that requires a staggering amount of sweat and creativity behind the scenes.

This issue is a chance to tip our hats to the people who create those meals and moments. Nancy Gaines takes a look at the pet projects of some top Boston-area chefs, many of which complement their main culinary work in surprising ways. (For instance, who would have guessed that a chef might have made the plate used to serve your meal?) Meanwhile, Jonathan Soroff catches up with No. 9 Park sous-chef and Top Chef veteran Stephanie Cmar. And just in time for Valentine's Day, Sarah Hagman hears from some culinarians who found love in the kitchen.

I've heard it said that in Boston, our celebrities are chefs and athletes. You'll also find the latter in this issue. Matt Martinelli gets to know our cover subject, aerial skier Emily Cook, and several other locally bred Olympians going for the gold at Sochi.

Kitchen Encounters

The workplace is the second most likely spot you'll meet your significant other. Throw late nights and some white truffle oil into the mix, and it's no surprise many chefs meet their soul mates in the kitchen. So in the spirit of Valentine's Day, we asked a few local married couples about their recipes for romance.

Jeremy and Lisa Sewall, now co-owners of Lineage, first met at L'Espalier in 1996. Three months later, they had their first date—though Lisa didn't know it was a date at first. The pair drove to York, Maine, where he cut his finger while cooking dinner at his parents' house. "He never cuts himself," Lisa says. "That's when I knew he liked me!" They celebrate on March 31 every year, though she admits she can't remember what he cooked that day. Something she'll never forget? The bottle of white truffle oil Jeremy gave her one Valentine's Day—a luxury at a time when money was tight. He says, "It's a gift I'll never be able to top."

Marjorie Druker and Paul Brophy, co-owners of the New England Soup Factory and the Modern Rotisserie, were in the same class at Johnson & Wales (where their daughter is a current student). But the couple didn't meet until a sophomore-year internship at a Florida resort. Their second date involved a picnic prepared with a hot plate in the employees' dorm. When they went to a hardware store to purchase utensils for their alfresco meal, the cashier asked, "Are you married?" Paul responded, "Not yet."

Having just arrived from Russia, Viktoriya Bulavinova was working as a busser and bar back at dbar in 2006 when she met Chris Coombs, now chef-owner of dbar, Boston Chops and Deuxave (where Viktoriya works as service captain today). Each influenced the other's palate. He introduced her to lobster—alas, she's allergic, which necessitated a CVS trip during a date—and helped her navigate Chinatown's spicy cuisine. "Every time I watch her eat the Szechuan fish stew at Gourmet Dumpling House, I think, 'This was the girl who couldn't handle black pepper on her salad!'" says Coombs, who in turn learned how to make traditional blinis from Vika's grandmother.

Farmstead Table co-owners Chad and Sharon Burns met while working at Tapawingo, a Michigan restaurant. He showed her around the kitchen on her first day; soon they were exploring hidden beaches and fields full of fireflies, even hunting for morel mushrooms together. When Chad made her a morel and asparagus cassoulet, Sharon says, "I told him it was the best morel cassoulet I'd ever had. It was also the only one I'd ever had, but I haven't had a better one since." / Sarah Hagman

ARTISTRY FOR LEXINGTON

A NEW INN ADDS FINE DINING TO THE 'BURB.

ALL SEASONS: Artistry on the Green will have hyper-seasonal menus.

LEXINGTON IS FINALLY KEEPING UP with the Joneses. Neighboring Concord has 80 Thoreau and Bondir; even Lincoln has AKA Bistro. Lexington has long been a fine-dining desert, but that will soon change with the opening of Artistry on the Green inside the Inn at Hastings Park, a new boutique inn.

Executive chef Matt Molloy, who's worked at Lumière in Newton and the Beacon Hill Bistro, says the restaurant will share the same mentality as the former and its executive sous-chef, Ben Tyson, hails from the latter. Molloy promises "hyper-seasonal menus" built on strong relationships with local purveyors and a "passion for charcuterie." Expect dishes such as roasted wild mushroom soup with truffle vinaigrette, crispy braised pork galette with parsley and frisee salad, and braised lamb shoulder with soft polenta, confit tomatoes, lamb bacon and pearl onions with tapenade jus. Molloy won't simply keep it local—wild Maryland striped bass and spice-roasted Long Island duck breast will make an appearance, too. And he's got a practical side: There's a neighborhood menu geared to locals featuring "a great burger," plus pot roast and chowder. Don't expect a bar menu, however, or even any seating at the bar, at least not yet. The terms of the liquor license are rather strict because the restaurant is located in a residential district.

NEW BITES FOR BARKING

The Barking Crab is stepping up its game with a new chef, a new general manager and a new winter menu, just in time to celebrate 20 years in business. Executive chef Joshua Brown spent seven years at Tomasso Trattoria & Enoteca in Southborough, working his way up from line cook to executive chef. His new menu includes daily specials like tuna Bolognese on hand-cut linguine, and the regular menu offers lobster pot pie with lemon mashed potatoes and Ritz Crackers crumbs, as well as a pork chop with cheddar grits for non-seafood eaters. The bar menu has lots of appealing nibbles, such as crab-stuffed deviled eggs, seafood sausage and Thai-curried razor clams. And new general manager Matt White (Jasper's nephew) got his start waiting tables at the Summer Shack in Back Bay before becoming general manager there and later helping to open the Summer Shack in Hingham.

FIRE'S FLY: The Neapolitan pizza oven looms large at Todd Winer's Pastoral.

345 Congress St., Boston
pastoralfortpoint.com

FORT POINT FARMED OUT

TODD WINER STICKS TO A PASTORAL FEEL.

THERE IS NO SUBTEXT BEHIND THE NAME of Pastoral, chef/co-owner Todd Winer's first restaurant, where the rustic theme is proudly on display. All the food will be either licked by fire or coming out of a brick oven, and the star of the show will be the Neapolitan pizzas—an Old World favorite. But thanks to the farmhouse decor, you really can't miss the vibe from the moment you step through the door at the Fort Point restaurant.

In the main dining area, different types of chairs are scattered around mismatched tables (mixed-wood ones, zinc-topped ones, a farm table made from a saw-horse and a communal table pulled out of a barn in Maine). The tin ceiling has a chipped-paint look, and a chandelier is made from wire milk crates and old milk bottles. Even the host stand is made out of metal roofing and wood-stove legs. In keeping with the do-it-yourselfer-meets-antique-aficionado theme, a collage of reclaimed windows from old New England warehouses and farmhouses separates the dining area from the adjoining bar.

The bar offerings will range from traditional wine, beer and cocktail selections to more unique sips such as wine on tap, orange wine, and beer infused with seasonal fruits or kept in the oven overnight to add a smoky flavor.

"I kind of wanted to take that whole process that everyone has been doing with spirits and swing it 180 degrees toward beer," says Winer, who previously served as executive chef of the Met Restaurant Group. "But it's really important for me that everyone is welcome. Whether there's Budweiser and pepperoni pizza or if you want a sour ale from Trillium and some weird pizza that we're coming up with for the day, we want to accommodate you."

The well-traveled Winer recently got his Neapolitan pizza-making certification and installed the much-hyped "Maserati of Neapolitan ovens" in the kitchen, so the dough will be ready to stretch by the restaurant's opening, slated for mid-February.

"It's light, it's fresh, it's all-natural," Winer says of Neapolitan pizza. "You can eat six of them, and they don't fill you up. It's not really processed cheese, premade sauce, frozen crust. It's the real deal. Each one is hand-stretched to order."

But don't call the Fort Point eatery just a pizzeria. The varied menu will include meat and fish, such as skate and Acadian redfish. A lunchtime takeaway spot, offering pizza slices, sandwiches, calzones and salads, will turn into a chef's counter where nighttime diners can get an up-close view of the kitchen action.

"We've come pretty far from breaking bread," Winer says. "But we still want to have that Old World-style hospitality."

Q&A

LOVE STORIES

Daniel Jones, editor of The New York Times' Modern Love column, reads from his anecdotal relationship guide, Love Illuminated, at the Brookline Booksmith on Feb. 7.

HOW HAVE YOU SEEN RELATIONSHIPS EVOLVE DURING THE 10 YEARS YOU'VE BEEN EDITOR OF MODERN LOVE? I think the main influence that's changing relationships is technology. It seems to me that with all these things, especially people having relationships through their phones and through their laptops with strangers, that people's relationship lives are fragmenting into certain people they have relationships with only online, that they never meet, and that they have this really strong emotional connection with. It almost seems like people trying to compartmentalize their lives into different pieces.

ARE YOU SURPRISED BY HOW PRIVATE SOME OF THE SUBMISSIONS ARE? Yeah, absolutely. When people write these essays, they're taking control of something that's potentially embarrassing or that they want to understand. It's a generous act to share that because, chances are, no matter how freakish you feel for being obsessed about a certain thing or not being able to understand some complexity of relationships, there are several hundred thousand people who feel the same way. I think one reason the column has endured and is widely read is it's this odd situation of having something extremely private in a forum that could not be more public and more broadly available and read.

IS IT BAD FORM TO STALK SOMEBODY ON SOCIAL MEDIA BEFORE A DATE? Stalking somebody on social media before a date is so widely done that if it was considered bad form, then everybody would be in bad form. But what's interesting is there's a risk to it. Anyone's experienced a time when you find out too much about a person in advance of meeting them, and then it makes the meeting fake. It turns meeting the person into an exercise in trying to get them to talk about the things you already know about them so you can move on to other things. / Hannah Sheinberg

Good Eats: Fun House

Here's another reason to welcome the weekend: Noodle Stop, the noodle pop-up brought to you by Kendall Square's Bon Me restaurant, which began as a Friday-night concept and recently expanded into Saturday. Like the regular menu, these bowls draw heavily on Vietnamese cuisine but sidestep tradition for some creative license—such as ho fun noodles paired with chicken meatballs. The pappardelle-wide rice ribbons, a Chinese staple, share a mild coconut-curry broth with supremely tender, boldly fragrant chicken meatballs and long leaves of wilted napa cabbage. Oh, and there's spicy caramel popcorn for dessert. / Elizabeth Bomze

Tongue Tied

Menus can leave you feeling a little lost in translation. We had some local chefs demystify a few of their lesser-known ingredients—so you can stop Googling under the table. / Hannah Weintraub

GRANO ARSO "The fettuccine grano arso is made using an Old World technique passed down from our mother's family in Canosa di Puglia," Carla and Christine Pallotta explain of their new Nebo dish. Said to have been made from grain left over after the burning of fields at harvest's end, the "burnt flour" is used in noodles served with roasted porchetta, escarole, cannellini beans and sage butter.

L'PIPPENANNIE Made locally at Fiore di Nonno in Somerville, this cheese has made it onto Ribelle's newly launched brunch menu, as part of the bagel and antipasti dish. "In my mind, it's the best cream cheese I ever had," chef Tim Maslow says.

SALSIFY "I always get lots of questions when I put it on the menu," 80 Thoreau chef Carolyn Johnson says of this winter root vegetable, whose flavor is sometimes compared to that of oysters or artichokes. "I'm using it on a dish of roasted monkfish saddle with duchess potatoes and swiss chard."

SEA TRUFFLE At the Sinclair, chef Matt Cunningham's mushroom-in-a-jar snack includes the 'shrooms, buttermilk polenta and this special preparation of u-10 scallops, which gives the dish "a nice hint of the ocean." Cunningham explains: "It's a scallop we brine and dehydrate to give it a texture able to be grated on top of food, similar to using a truffle."

UMEBOSHI "True umeboshi has religious purposes," says Clio sous-chef Zachary Watkins. But at the restaurant, the pickled Japanese apricots are used for a salty zing. "They're washed in alcohol, salted with shiso salt and pickled in a salt and vinegar mixture," Watkins explains."It instantly makes you salivate. When we pair it with our swordfish at Clio, we use the umeboshi as seasoning in a puree of red currant, grapefruit and Thai chilies."

Drink of the Moment
RUBBER BAND MAN

PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Spiced Cana Brava rum, Pierre Ferrand cognac, Cardamaro, Benedictine

INVENTOR: Highball Lounge lead bartender Shaher Misif, who's also known as a highballer–"At least that's what it says on my business card."

ORIGIN: "So, Rubber Band Man: What it means is somebody who jumps around a lot," Misif explains. Inspired by his worldly adventures, the cocktail taps rum from the islands, Cardamaro from Italy and cognac and Benedictine from France.

TASTE: The cognac's grape is met by notes of anise, cloves, cinnamon and nutmeg from the house-spiced rum. Benedictine adds a sweetness that's finished with a smoky citrus flavor from a pyrotechnic trick with an orange peel.

SECRET POWER: The ability to turn an avid bourbon drinker into a rum advocate. "I think everybody's an everything person," Misif says. "If you drink any spirit in the right manner, anybody can enjoy it. It just has to be presented right."

HIGHBALL LOUNGE
Nine Zero Hotel, 90 Tremont St., Boston (617-772-0202)
highballboston.com

BONUS POINTS: For the toothpick-speared Luxardo cherries, which allow for much classier removal.

PAIR IT WITH: Something citrusy, like the Brussels sprouts ($6). The vegetable-averse can opt for Korean fried chicken nuggets ($9). "Some of the sauces and the spices in the drink go hand-in-hand," Misif says.

BAR ATMOSPHERE: Good cocktails. Good fun.

AS EVIDENCED BY: The #DuckieRosé, a blend of aromatized wine served with a floating rubber friend that chills the drink. Enjoy it over a game of Connect Four, Battleship or Guess Who? while a DJ spins tunes from the Roots, Lana Del Rey and the Police. / Sarah Hagman

GROUP DYNAMIC

For Sam Bodkin, founder of Groupmuse—a network connecting classical musicians with millennial audiences through BYOB house parties turned chamber concerts—Beethoven's Große Fuge was a gateway drug. "My first year of college, I was sitting in the basement of one of my best friends," a cellist who gave an impromptu performance, Bodkin recalls. "It was truly one of the formative moments of my life." Bodkin started raiding the Newton Free Library's classical section; soon he was hooked. "I decided I was going to devote my life to figuring out how to bring my generation close to classical music, because a sort of unfortunate corollary to this wonderful personal discovery was the realization that my generation didn't know sherbet from Schubert."

The Groupmuse concept started marinating after Bodkin met New England Conservatory students who threw house-party concerts in Allston. "It was very much a college party—drinking, socializing, partying—but it was tied together by truly great young musicians playing their hearts out." Coupling that experience with memories of Couchsurfing across Europe, he hosted the first Groupmuse in January of 2013. Now four to five Groupmuses gather every week. After each, a bowl for musician donations is passed around, as is a clipboard so attendees can volunteer to host a party for their own friends and members who've RSVP'd through the Groupmuse website. "We are so overwhelmed by how well this has been working in getting young people to come to classical music every single week."

Bodkin thinks Boston's character has much to do with the rapid growth. "It's a small city, but we have all these world-class cultural institutions," he says. "You have this preposterous concentration of musical talent." But starting this month, Groupmuse is expanding, with parties planned for Austin, Philadelphia, San Francisco and New York. Bodkin's also developing a revenue model. "The problem is, of course, that 20-somethings are the most hilariously broke demographic," he says. "But we do know that there are probably more affluent middle-agers that also want intimate experiences with art that's so close—just a foot away. And they don't necessarily want strangers coming into their homes and getting tipsy." The plan is to curate private performances for clients who control the guest lists.

But Bodkin's mission remains making classical accessible for young audiences—as reinforced by a recent comment from a first-timer that was music to his ears. "He said, 'I don't think I've been in a room where so few people were on their cellphones for such a long time.' That made me so happy." / Jacqueline Houton

HOUSE MUSIC: Parties typically feature two 20-minute performances and a 20-minute intermission.

Purveyors: Brothers' Brew

You're probably familiar with Trappist Preserves, the widely sold jams and jellies that the monks of St. Joseph's Abbey in Spencer have been making for decades. Last month, the Massachusetts monastery added another enterprise to its repertoire: beer. Newly anointed by the Belgian-based International Trappist Association, the monks' Spencer Trappist Ale is the first of its kind brewed outside Europe, and save for the Belgian yeast, it's an all-American product. Like its Trappist brethren, the hay-colored brew delivers a balance of warm spices, citrus, barley, malt and clean hoppy bitterness—not to mention a shot of hometown pride. / Elizabeth Bomze

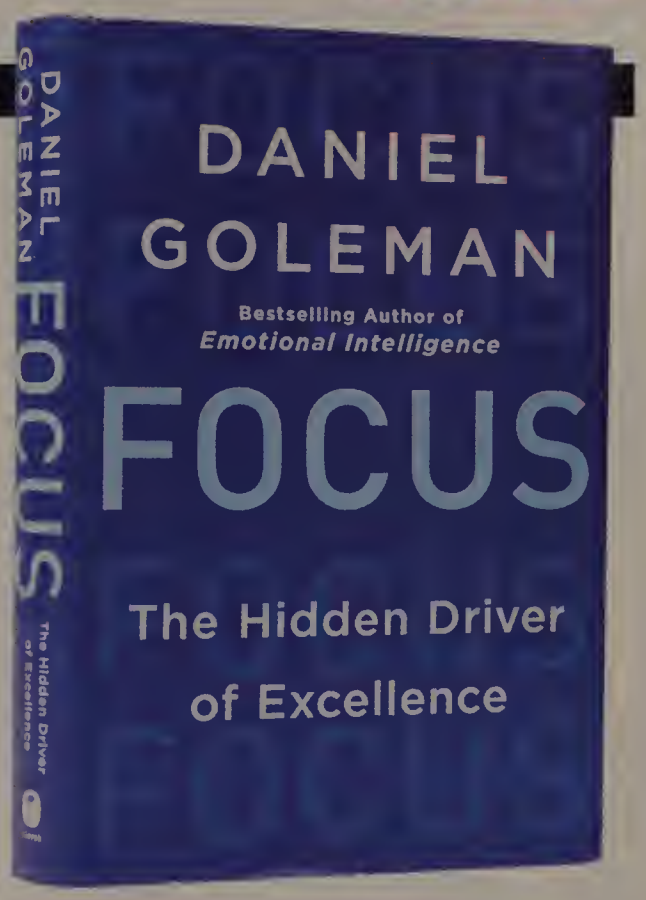
PRESENTS OF MIND

A PSYCHOLOGIST FOCUSES IN ON THE SCIENCE OF ATTENTION.



Focus: The Hidden Driver of Excellence
By Daniel Goleman
Published by HarperCollins, 320 pages, $29
The author lives in Massachusetts.

SHARP ATTENTION INVOLVES THE SPARKLING of neurons in the prefrontal cortex. But focus comes in other forms, as shown by psychologist Daniel Goleman, author of the influential bestseller Emotional Intelligence and a longtime behavioral-science reporter for The New York Times. In his new book, Focus, he distinguishes "top-down wiring"—responsible for the rational, goal-oriented kind of concentration—from the "bottom-up" variation, a more intuitive, musing, dreamy form of focus. That looser net of the "wandering mind" can capture things that later connect with the rational zone. (One resulting surprise is that people with ADD who suffer from loose juggling of attention can, at other times, zoom in and "hyperfocus," sharp as a tack.)

The two styles can alternate and work well together. Goleman discusses their underlying neural geographies; lit up in laboratory brain imaging, they include the amygdala, capturing "gut" feelings, and that disciplined prefrontal cortex. But focus also entails other styles. Mirror neurons in the insula help us borrow from our own feelings to empathize with those of others. They aid us in situations where attention must stretch to take in the systemic picture, as in the corporate world, where that wider aperture is required to embrace many perspectives, other people's points of view and—we hope—self-awareness. Goleman's observations wander and jab fascinatingly.

FROM PAGE 44: But the site of the gamma spike during a creative insight seems telling: an area associated with dreams, metaphors, the logic of art, myth, and poetry. These operate in the language of the unconscious, a realm where anything is possible. Freud's method of free association, where you speak whatever comes into your mind without censoring, opens one door to this open-awareness mode. ◆

In warmer months, grab a table or chair on The Lawn, the inn's alfresco dining area overlooking the bay.

If you venture out of the inn, don't miss the sophisticated steakhouse fare at 22 Bowen's on the waterfront. The bone-in prime Delmonico is first-rate, as is the people-watching.

DOWN BY THE BAY: Perched along the shore, Castle Hill Inn overlooks Narragansett Bay.

INN FOR A TREAT

NEWPORT'S CASTLE HILL INN MIXES REFINEMENT WITH A BREATHTAKING BACKDROP.

EAST OF THE PLEASURE DOMES OF NEWPORT'S Bellevue Avenue, the trees recede into sunlit landscaping, and the lawns roll broader. Past the Beaux Arts-style country club, on the outermost rocks of Aquidneck Island, a lighthouse commands the entrance to Narragansett Bay. Above this lighthouse sits a Victorian mansion. It's by no means the grandest property in Newport, or even in the immediate neighborhood. But the Castle Hill Inn is undoubtedly the most hospitable.

Built in 1875 by Harvard marine biologist Alexander Agassiz, the house is perched at a juncture of land and sea ideal for anyone wanting to spend long afternoons staring at the whitecaps. A path leads from the parking lot down through a scrabbly wood to the lighthouse, which still has a tendency to sound. There's a rocky cove at the bottom that used to be a favorite haunt of Grace Kelly, who stayed here while she was filming High Society. The staff even built a staircase for her to reach it without undue clambering, and today the cove still bears the name "Grace Kelly Beach."

Two Chinese stone dragons flank the front door, leftovers from Agassiz's collection of Asian art and furniture. Many of the antiques that deck the landings and hallways have a Mikado-esque aesthetic. Wood paneling, family portraits and vintage wallpaper fortify the sense of a private home—this is a Relais & Chateaux property that skirts the line between boutique hotel and country bed and breakfast. Housecleaning must go through an ocean of varnish, since, from the rafters to the floorboards, the inn is a confection of exposed wood. Before heading to your room, let your eyes drift to the blue panorama in the dining room. Tall windows open on a nearly encircling view of Narragansett Bay, with the Claiborne Pell Newport Bridge cutting a sparkling silver arc across the right-hand field.

Like any old house, the inn has its bodily noises. In strong winds, the upper levels shimmy and rattle. Chimneys whistle and odd clanks sound against the exterior walls. That makes the warmth inside all the more delicious. Rooms boast heated bathroom floors and rain showers. One of the more impressive is the Lighthouse Suite, featuring a wood-paneled parlor with an ocean view. To further gild the bedroom's gold and ivory palette, there's a large soaking tub and a gas fireplace, with the sort of carpeting in which you could confidently bounce a porcelain teacup.

The Turret Suite at the top of the house, though, is the most ostentatious room, and is much in demand for the many wedding parties drawn to Castle Hill's photogenic vistas and catering menu. Split on two levels, it's got an oversized marble walk-in shower and 320-degree views of the water, with a mounted telescope for scouring the horizon.

Breakfast and afternoon tea are complimentary and imperative. Start your morning with a pot of French press coffee, a homemade gooseberry turnover and a dish of lobster hash with poached eggs. Eggs, however, are only an intimation of the kitchen's flair. Chef Karsten Hart leads a team that specializes in the art of the tasting menu (à la carte is available, but it'd be criminal not to sample as broadly as your stomach and budget allow). As expected, there's an emphasis on Rhode Island produce and shellfish: butternut squash velouté, roast fluke with littlenecks and heirloom calypso beans. The local scallops with Bosc pears is the sort of inspired play on textures and tastes that wins Michelin stars. Pay the extra for wine pairings, since the beverage program errs toward smaller labels and unusual varietals. The intent is to create a unique meal, and it succeeds, exquisitely.

A property of this caliber is expected to offer seamless service, but Castle Hill burnishes the polish with country warmth. The extra touches—a friendly drive to the Thames Street shops, the extra chocolate chip cookies with the turndown service—lift the experience out of the merely gracious. A visit here takes on the light of one of the soft oil portraits on the inn's stairwell—it becomes a beautiful memory. ◆

FRIENDS ARE OFTEN SURPRISED WHEN I suggest certain destinations not known for amazing food: the ancient restaurant whose menu hasn't changed since the '60s, the local pub that leans heavily on the Sysco truck. "It's about the hospitality," I reply. I'm a firm believer that a warm welcome and a barman who cares enough to remember my usual can elevate the most pedestrian chicken parm or nacho plate into something satisfying. Restaurants with an evident ethos to make every customer feel well cared for can get away with less-than-extraordinary food. But combine an exceptional focus on hospitality with terrific food, and you end up with a long-running smash. That's the fate for which I expect Fairsted Kitchen, the newest kid on the Brookline block, is destined.

The warm feeling starts with Patrick Gaggiano's bar program, which reinforces the welcome recent trend of independent restaurants taking cocktails, wine and beer equally seriously. Specialty cocktails show roots in century-old classics and all the right craft ingredients, epitomized by the Antigua Plaza ($12), with American rye, mezcal, Cocchi Americano, Benedictine and bitters—smoky, complex, balanced, delicious. A rotation of cocktails on tap (!) includes the Boulevardier ($12): rye, Cappelletti (an Alpine Italian amaro) and sweet vermouth, like a richer, browner Negroni. Nine by-the-glass wines include welcome novelties like the citrusy, almost briny 2010 Barbanau Cassis Blanc ($8) from Provence, and the tongue-twisting 2010 Dingač Pelješac ($9), a deep-purple Croatian red with the black pepper and cherry accents of a zinfandel. The 66-deep bottle list is helpfully organized by style (e.g., "citrus and mineral" whites) and tilted toward France, complemented by German and Austrian whites and Italian reds, plus a sprinkling of New World wines.

The menu bounces between Mediterranean coastal cuisine, East/West fusion and refined takes on Mitteleuropean peasant fare. Leading off the meze-sized snacks menu is the pig-head lettuce wrap ($5), more challenging on paper than the palate, a crunchy fritter of mild, unscary pork pâté dressed like a bánh mì in herbs, chili and slivered root vegetables on a Boston lettuce leaf—offal in Franco-Vietnamese drag for beginners. Also rewarding are the cod beignets ($8), lovely, creamy-centered bites with clear cod flavor, given brightness and depth from a smoked-tomato confit. The latke-like potato cake ($8) is surprisingly light given the inimitable flavor of duck-fat frying, its schmear of paprika-dusted yogurt evoking a bit of Budapest. Cauliflower dotted with capers and raisins ($8) is simple verging on dull, rescued by the umami jolt of fine white anchovies.

Small plates pack the biggest wow factor. Herb spatzle ($13) with leeks, Gruyère and tender rabbit is what the deathly cliché of gussied-up mac 'n' cheese dreams of being, an elegant plate of comfort. Cumin-dusted lamb ribs ($13) with a Southeast Asian dip of rice vinegar and fish sauce are crisp-edged, meaty, fatty wonders. White beans ($13) bring a waft of the Iberian seaside, loaded with beautifully tender squid, redolent of fresh sage, with a few cubes of squash for color, soon hidden once you stir in the squid-ink aioli: a magnificently hearty, elemental stew. Raw fluke ($13) takes a pristine sample of a great local fish, cuts it crudo-style, and then mostly leaves it alone, with just a few complementary fruit and herb notes, plus the subtle, perfect exclamation point of microtome-thin slices of serrano chili. The humble stuffed cabbage ($13) is a surprise stunner, pretty as a picture with its crown of caramelized onions; with a ravishing caraway-flecked veal filling, it's Ashkenazi Jewish soul food dressed up for the ball. A large plate of young chicken ($19) boasts exemplary roasting technique and is given an awe-inspiring foundation in the little-seen frike, the superbly earthy, nutty Middle Eastern grain of roasted green wheat.

I won't go on about the amount of apparent affection for their customers, the sense that making strangers feel happy with lovingly prepared food and skillfully made drinks is a role that owners Steve Bowman and Andrew Foster seem born to play. In a space this cozy (35 dining room seats, with another dozen in the bar), you can't miss it from any corner of the room. In just a few months, Fairsted Kitchen has cemented Washington Square's blossoming reputation as a destination not just for nearby locals, but a larger swath of Bostonians seeking serious, inventive food in a casual, convivial—you might even say loving—package. ◆

Q: WHAT SHOULD I LOOK FOR IN A SKIN CARE REGIMEN?

A: The answer is determined by your age and your individual type of skin. However, there are products that everybody needs. The minimum basics: cleanser, sunscreen and moisturizer. The should-haves: retinols, antioxidants, peptides, and glycolic acid.

This article will focus on cleansers. Cleansers should be fragrance-free and matched to your skin type.

If you have oily or acne-prone skin you will want a cleanser that contains glycolic acid or salicylic acid. You may also benefit from using a scrub on a weekly basis, such as the SkinHealth Honey Amber Scrub.

Dry and sensitive skin types should cleanse at night with a gentle cleanser and should not use scrubs. To avoid over-cleansing, you should simply rinse your face with water in the morning.

In addition, all skin types will benefit from regular visits to SkinHealth for professional facials, microdermabrasion or other skin care treatments to remove debris from your pores and exfoliate dead skin.

LABOR DAY* (NO STARS)
Starring Kate Winslet, Josh Brolin, Clark Gregg, James Van Der Beek and Tobey Maguire. Based on the novel by Joyce Maynard. Written for the screen and directed by Jason Reitman. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Movies / Sean Burns

LABOR'S LOST

KATE WINSLET AND JOSH BROLIN'S NEW FILM WORKS SO HARD TO BE SO BAD.

THERE ARE WORSE WAYS TO MAKE A LIVING, but I worry sometimes that going to see hundreds of movies a year might breed an odd complacency. Sturgeon's law dictates that "90 percent of everything is crap," and so perhaps as a coping mechanism to preserve whatever tiny shreds of sanity remain within my rattling hamster wheel of a brain, the majority of these pictures are almost immediately forgotten. Now entering my 15th year upon this beat, I fear I may have developed an internal, self-protecting bilge pump that flushes most lousy movies from my consciousness before I even have a chance to get too upset about them. Have I desensitized myself to garbage?

So a movie like Labor Day is cause for celebration. Adapted from a Joyce Maynard novel and directed by 36-year-old Jason Reitman with a solemnity so inflated it defies all logic, common sense and presumably several of God's holy commandments, this is a spectacularly awful film. Breathtaking to behold as it barrels from one terrible artistic decision to another, Labor Day is so histrionically abysmal that it makes you realize how lazy and complacent most other movies are in their banal mediocrity. Labor Day's atrociousness is thrilling. I felt alive again as I left the theater.

Behold the heartbreaking tale of pubescent Henry Wheeler (Gattlin Griffith), who spends the summer of 1987 riding his bike through a New Hampshire neighborhood, forlorn and missing his dad (Clark Gregg), who not-so-recently took off and started another, happier family. Meanwhile, Henry's still stuck in a ramshackle, falling-apart house with his sad-sack mother Adele (Kate Winslet). Prone to increasingly intense anxiety attacks ever since her husband left, she's a depressive, agoraphobic drag who can't even hold it together long enough for a trip to the local department store.

But that's where the magic happens. Convicted murderer Frank Chambers (Josh Brolin), who just jumped out the window of a nearby prison infirmary and is bleeding from the gut after an appendix operation, has been hanging out in the boys' clothes section, just waiting for a family with a hot mom who looks like Kate Winslet he can hold hostage for the holiday weekend.

It's a hideous Harlequin romance novel with all the good parts cut out.

Frank's the gentlest, courtliest escaped killer you've ever seen in a movie. The Wheelers are his terrified captives, but just as soon as he arrives, Frank sets about devoting himself to household repairs. That very afternoon, stomach wound and all, he fixes the stone work in their crumbling basement, cleans the gutters, changes the oil in the family station wagon and teaches Henry how to throw a knuckleball—all within the space of a single misguided musical montage.

It gets better. As Winslet's generous décolletage trembles in the foreground, Brolin takes a large bite of a peach from an overflowing bowl on the kitchen counter, worrying aloud that her fruit is ripe and will probably go to waste. (I'm kind of dumb, but I think what he's saying there was probably supposed to be a metaphor.) In any case, Frank and Adele do what comes natural to consenting adults in such a situation. They bake a cobbler.

The worst thing that has happened to the pastry industry since Jason Biggs humped one in American Pie, Labor Day's central erotic set piece is a howler for the ages. Amid lushly photographed close-ups of these lovers' hands intertwining, wrist deep and writhing amid the creamy fruit center, Brolin takes command. "Enough about filling. I want to talk about crust."

It's a hideous Harlequin romance novel with all the good parts cut out, as Reitman inexplicably keeps drifting back to Henry's point of view, but only occasionally. Then sometimes it's Adele's film. Other times the movie belongs to Frank. It's impossible to tell what we're supposed to be getting at here with this silly story, whose flashbacks we're watching at a given moment, and why anybody in their right mind would ever hire Tobey Maguire to deliver a voice-over narration. Last year, in The Great Gatsby, Maguire's strangled-cat whimpering brutalized some of the finest passages F. Scott Fitzgerald ever wrote. So you can only imagine what he does to Maynard's text.

Jason Reitman is a slick kid whose dad directed Ghostbusters; thus he was handed the keys to the kingdom at the tender age of 28. (In Hollywood, allegations of nepotism only stick if you're a girl like Sofia Coppola or Lena Dunham.) The know-nothing glibness of Reitman's Thank You for Smoking, Juno and Young Adult rankled this particular critic, but be careful what you wish for, because the supposed sincerity of Labor Day is, astoundingly, quite comically worse.

In 10 years, I expect this will be playing the midnight camp circuit alongside The Room at the Coolidge Corner. I just hope for the theater staff's sake that people don't throw pies at the screen. ◆

HEART SURGERY

THE ISRAELI-BORN SONGWRITER CAPTIVATES WITH HIS VOICE AND RESTLESS INTROSPECTION.

ASAF AVIDAN RECALLS THE "WHAT THE..." moment he sparked the first time he sang in public, when a half-dozen people in the pub stopped drinking and talking to stare in disbelief. The setting has changed for the mohawked singer/songwriter, a star in his native Israel who performs for hundreds of thousands at European festivals. But the high, grainy timbre of his voice still astounds, bringing to mind female singers like Janis Joplin and Amy Winehouse, as well as Jeff Buckley and Jimmy Scott.

"Whatever people want to hear or think they hear, I can't control it," says Avidan, who makes his local debut at the Somerville Theatre on Feb. 22. "I didn't realize there was anything special or different that I was doing with my voice. I needed to express a wide spectrum of emotions, especially emotions that had to do with pain and anger, and instinctively, I reached that range because it helped me portray almost physical pain."

Avidan, 33, only discovered that visceral urge to sing and write songs in 2006 after he broke up with a longtime girlfriend, quit his job as an animator in Tel Aviv and house-sat for a friend in Jerusalem. "I brought this guitar, and I don't know why I brought it because I wasn't so much into music," he says. "It was kind of a self-therapeutic process. When you don't just write songs, when you vocalize your thoughts and you hear yourself sing these words out loud, it helps."

Indeed, that voice acts as his conduit to depths of soul-searing introspection. "It's almost like my heart is an archaeological dig," Avidan says from Hawaii, where he takes a monthlong vacation each year with now-girlfriend and bandmate Mikey Bashiri. He still hesitates to call himself happy, preferring the word "content" to describe his life. "I'm pretty melancholy," he says. "That [former] breakup is just an example of a long string of heartaches and loneliness that I had growing up."

"It was kind of a self-therapeutic process. When you don't just write songs, when you vocalize your thoughts and you hear yourself sing these words out loud, it helps."

ASAF AVIDAN
plays the Somerville Theatre on Feb. 22.

The son of diplomats, Avidan moved around, spending four years of his childhood in Jamaica. "There was no love or hate for [travel]," he says. "As a kid, you think it's a normal life because that's what you're accustomed to." He didn't develop his taste for music until his teen years, when he followed the thread from Nirvana and Soundgarden to Jimi Hendrix and Led Zeppelin, then on to blues and folk, finally settling on the lyrical import of Bob Dylan and particularly Leonard Cohen. "He painstakingly chooses every word for two or three months," says Avidan, who stopped short of embracing Cohen's methods. "I really needed something immediate."

Like Cohen, Avidan has branched from folk roots to a more modern sonic palette. After three albums with his folk-rock group the Mojos, topping the charts across Europe when a Berlin DJ remixed "One Day/Reckoning Song," Avidan wanted to pursue different sounds.

Last year's resulting solo debut, Different Pulses, complements the fragile mood cast by his vocals. "My life is like a wound, I scratch so I can bleed," Avidan sings in the title track, surrounded by stark textures and snare rhythms in the vein of trip-hop pioneers Portishead.

"The idea was to make it as personal and minimal as I could make it, and it grew from there," says the singer/guitarist, who experimented with keyboards and loops with producer/percussionist Tamir Muskat from Balkan Beat Box. "613 Shades of Sad" sports a spooky synth melody as well as rubbery guitar phrases that suggest an oud, partly because he put a sponge under the strings. It's the only sound on the album that nods to his Middle Eastern environs. "I have been around," Avidan says. "I don't really feel this urge to define myself."

In turn, while he spent 2013 perfecting his stage show with a band in support of the new album throughout Europe, Avidan says he's touring solo this year to keep it interesting, for himself and the audience. "I like this idea of starting a song and not really being sure where it's going to end," he says. "I want people to go out of the venue feeling something, having gone through some kind of emotional arc." ◆

RAW DATA

IT MIGHT BE TIME TO CLEAR YOUR CACHE.

A while back, a friend of mine handed me his phone to look up directions to a pizza place. When I went to Google, a prior search appeared on the drop-down window. That search was "adult videos." Thus I was plunged into the 21st-century version of an age-old conundrum: Should you point out an embarrassing situation, like a zipper at half-mast or a protuberant booger? Or do you avoid the awkward confrontation and pretend you didn't notice? I think a good friend should tell his buddy that Google searches don't evaporate when you're done with them. So I steeled my resolve, gave him his phone and told him we were three miles from the pizza place. I'm not that good of a friend.

Another phone debacle nearly unfolded when a friend of my wife passed her phone to a guy at a party to show him a photo. The guy with the phone started swiping through the album, and suddenly a look of horror flashed across the woman's face. She lunged over and snatched her phone away. "A girlfriend of mine was saying I'm too skinny," she explained, "so I took a naked photo when I got out of the shower, to show her I'm not too skinny." She declined multiple gallant offers of a second opinion.

Phones aren't the only means to electronic gaffes—you're leaving a digital trail every day and in ways you probably don't even think about. For example, the other day my kid requested some dumb cartoon on Netflix that he hadn't watched in a while. Before too long the "previously viewed" list presented a cluster of movies that were queued up nearly a month before, and they definitely weren't about Transformers.

One night's screenings included three lesbian-themed movies, one of which was called Room in Rome. The IMDB listing for that one warns, "The two actresses are nude for almost the entire film, and the camera revels in showing off their slender, naked bodies, their breasts, buttocks and genitalia." Room in Rome is not rated, although from the sounds of it I'd rate it A for Awesome.

My first thought, of course, was to accuse Heather of queuing up some racy lesbian skin flicks. Which I did. She issued a denial on the grounds that if she watched Room in Rome, she'd admit it. Besides, another movie viewed that night was The Haunting in Connecticut 2: Ghosts of Georgia. And I have a hard time imagining that she'd waste her time on a horror movie with a 19 percent Rotten Tomatoes rating.

The conclusion, evidently, is that one of our baby sitters has an appreciation for foreign cinema. I don't know which one it was, and I don't care. What was really none of my business only came to my attention because Netflix is a total narc. And that's just symptomatic of the wholesale privacy intrusion that constitutes modern life.

Think about it: You can use self-checkout all you want, but the grocery store knows what you just grabbed from the pharmacy aisle. So does your credit card company. So does Google, Comcast and probably Apple. Facebook knows who you're with, and the Mass Pike knows where you went. Amazon knows you bought a slutty Halloween costume—in February—and Bank of America is up to speed on that 2 am withdrawal at the ATM in New Orleans. (You know, the one that wasn't anywhere near a bank.) Nearly every single person on the street carries a camera that can instantly disseminate images worldwide. And you're worried about the NSA? Please.

Amazon knows you bought a slutty Halloween costume—in February—and Bank of America is up to speed on that 2 am withdrawal at the ATM in New Orleans.

Of course, you might try to minimize the potential embarrassment of your digital breadcrumb trail. Say you have a butt rash: Instead of Googling "butt rash," you type in "butt r" and hope it auto-fills the rest so you don't have to actually search for it.

Now, does that technique keep "butt rash" out of your search history? The hell if I know. Probably not, but you've got bigger issues to worry about, like that butt rash you've been Googling.

Over the years, I've picked up a few other guidelines for minimizing your electronic exposure. For example, don't sext—draw a picture and mail it. Don't send hasty emails in the heat of a moment. Instead, save them in your draft folder and eventually forget you wrote them. When Skyping, sit in the shadows like those people who were ashamed to tell Tony the Tiger that they enjoy a kids' cereal, even though Frosted Flakes are the taste adults have grown to love. And don't tell me your ATM pin code, as Sam Adams founder Jim Koch did one day over lunch at the brewery. I hope he's changed it since then.

Alternatively, you can quit being uptight and just live your life without worrying about what people think. After all, who cares? Just don't hand me your phone. ◆

TOP CHEF
NEW CHEF

Soroff On / Stephanie Cmar

STANDING THE HEAT

NO. 9 PARK'S RISING STAR DISHES ON TATTOOS, TASTING MENUS AND REALITY TV.

Top Chef: New Orleans, the 11th season of the wildly popular show, saw the return of Stephanie Cmar, 28, who also competed last season. Cmar began working in the food industry at the Muffin Shop in Marblehead when she was 15 years old. A 2007 graduate of Johnson & Wales, she returned to Boston and began working at the Top of the Hub. She then served as sous-chef at the now-defunct Ivy Restaurant before joining Barbara Lynch Gruppo in 2009 as a line chef at B&G Oysters. From there, she moved to Stir and then to No. 9 Park, where she currently serves as sous-chef. She lives in Boston.

Jonathan Soroff: What would you order as your last meal on death row?
Stephanie Cmar First of all, I'd have to make it. An egg sandwich on a Portuguese muffin, with cheddar cheese and bacon, mayonnaise and ketchup.

Single most important tool in the kitchen? A good knife.

Go-to dinner party recipe? Hmm. I'm trying to think of the last dinner party I had. I always have a good spread of cheeses, so that while I'm cooking people aren't starving. Then I always have something seafood that's easy. Something really simple, like bay scallops with bacon, chili, white wine and tomato.

Favorite cookbook? That's a big question. I'm sitting here, staring at a whole bunch of them right now. That's like asking me to pick a favorite child. I should say the Stir cookbook, but I guess lately I've been into the Araxi cookbook, from the Whistler ski resort in British Columbia. It's really creative, but it has those rustic qualities I love in food.

Silver bullet in the kitchen? Vegetable stock. It cures a lot of ills. If something's breaking, it usually brings it back together.

Do you wear Crocs in the kitchen? I don't. I wear Super Birkis.

That's actually their name? I couldn't make that up.

Do you have any tattoos? And any that would surprise me? I have plenty. So many. They're all kind of awesome, but I have cherries tattooed on my stomach, and that sort of surprises people.

Current food trend you find really annoying? Cupcakes. I don't like them that much, and I'm just confused why there are so many cupcake stores. I wish there were nacho stores, or something.

Hardest thing to cook? I've been working on pastry for a little while, and I have to say it's probably the hardest thing I've ever done.

If I showed up at your house unannounced, what would you serve me? Right now, looking in my refrigerator, it would have to be eggs and orange juice, since that's about the only thing in there.

One thing most people do wrong in the kitchen? Lose their temper.

Do you believe you can taste the mood the chef was in when he or she cooked something? One hundred percent. You can taste when someone's nervous cooking. You can taste when they're sad or mad. You overcompensate. When you're relaxed and calm, you just cook like you would if you were by yourself.

Sweet or savory? They go hand in hand. But I could probably start a meal with dessert and end with an entrée.

Most overrated culinary experience? Long tasting menus. I think nine courses is definitely appropriate, but when you start to move up into 20 or 21, your taste buds are gone after bite 15. And it just takes so long. The experience should be great, and I just can't sit that long. I also hate being overly full. I can't handle it.

Grossest thing you ever ate? In culinary school: tea-smoked duck. It went horribly, horribly wrong. I just remember it tasting bitter and like Earl Grey tea and just yuck.

One thing on which you judge a restaurant? Typos on the menu. It's one of my favorite games to play: Find a Typo.

Ever given anyone food poisoning? God, no.

Ever gotten it? No. I have an iron stomach.

How real is reality TV? Pretty darn real. That was my life on screen. You definitely watched me go through all the emotions. It's how it's edited that makes it seem overly dramatic, because certain story lines are focused on. But it's as real as being filmed 24/7 and then edited down can be.

How did Top Chef make you better at what you do? It made me more confident and made me trust my instincts more.

"That was my life on screen. You definitely watched me go through all the emotions. It's how it's edited that makes it seem overly dramatic."

Favorite celebrity chef? Guy Fieri. [Laughs] Just kidding. I guess David Chang. I like his cookbooks, and I like Lucky Peach.

Thing on the menu at No. 9 that you crave? Well, we recently took it off coming into January, but the Kampachi dish was so, so amazing. And right now, we have a quail on the menu that is just incredible.

Biggest difference between cooking at home and cooking in a restaurant? It's hard for me to cook at home, because I find myself cooking for 10 when there are only two people. I also don't have all my stuff. If I want to whip up an ice cream, I have to start that four days in advance at home, but I can do it in 15 minutes at work. Or if I want to use a piece of equipment. I don't have a very well-equipped kitchen. To be honest with you, in my house, I have two spoons, two forks, a Kcurig, a KitchenAid, a cast-iron pan and some pots. That's about it.

Best food-related movie of all time? Ratatouille. That one's precious. They say that Dominique Crenn was the inspiration for the female character.

Celebrity you'd most like to cook for? I'm gonna say Jennifer Lawrence. I like her. She seems fun. ◆

ON THE SIDE

THEY PUT IN LONG HOURS in their busy kitchens, but these celebrated local chefs also make time for pet projects that reflect personal and professional passions. For this group of top toques, such symbiotic sidelines encompass new hobbies and lifelong pursuits, tactile and cerebral enterprises, and efforts to help the business, the community and the industry. And did we mention fun?

THE POTTER

Dave Becker, chef/owner of the 14-year-old Sweet Basil in Needham, cookbook author and soon-to-be proprietor of a new restaurant in Wellesley, had been in the business all his life, starting as a dishwasher at age 11. Then three years ago, at age 35, he found himself "looking for more ways to unwind."

"I felt my brain shrink," Becker says. "I needed a physical hobby. I needed to forget about ideas for a while."

He took up pottery making at a neighborhood arts studio, which, he says, "was like a private gym membership. I could come and go at all hours." Plus, the colorful finished products were an asset at the restaurant. "You can drop it on the floor—so what if it chips? It's clearly handmade."

Becker made custom plates for himself and, until recently, for his friend Juan Pedrosa, executive chef of the new Glenville Stops in Allston. These days, Becker spends about five hours a week on the pottery. "It was a lot more, but it went from being something to decompress to being stressful."

Working with clay to create plates, Becker says, has much in common with making the rustic Mediterranean dishes for which he's known. "They both have to have character, flair, substance. And you have to cook them!"

What's not important are "tiny details," Becker says, adding that he feels much the same about food. "It's not an excuse for me to exercise complete control. I could never understand why chefs obsess with cutting round vegetables into little squares."

THE PHILANTHROPIST

World-class chef Barbara Lynch has never shrunk from speaking about how she grew up in the South Boston projects, one of six children of a single mother, the brat who stole an MBTA bus when she was 13 "for laughs." She uses her trajectory as a model for how others might get "up and out," which, with the relentless pushing of her high school home-ec teacher, she clearly did.

Now the proprietor of seven of the city's finest establishments (Menton, No. 9 Park, B&G Oysters, The Butcher Shop, Stir, Drink and Sportello, plus catering arm 9 at Home), Lynch, who turns 50 next month, has a foundation to help tug city kids in her footsteps.

The two-year-old Barbara Lynch Foundation has raised some $250,000, says executive director Kim Morin, with a big boost expected from this month's two major fundraisers, the Relais & Chateaux Grand Chef Gala and Toques & Tonic, featuring major culinary figures like Daniel Boulud and David Chang. The money goes to the two main efforts of the foundation: educating underprivileged elementary school kids about food culture and health, and tutoring high school students in entrepreneurship. To date, Lynch and her foundation's partners—The Cookbook Project, City Year and the Network for Teaching Entrepreneurship—have worked with youths from the Blackstone School in the South End, East Boston High and Boston Green Academy in South Boston. They expect to add several more schools this year.

"The goal is to give kids an opportunity, to give hope," she says. "For example, we took 80 third-graders to a farm. They had never seen a live cow. They held onto a potato like it was gold. I had to pry it out of their hands to make them wash up for lunch."

THE ENTOMOPHAGIST

Some restaurants are fined for having critters around. But at Jason Bond's hotspot Bondir, crickets are a culinary attraction.

The little buggers are the brainchild of executive sous-chef Rachel Miller, 25, who worked at Bondir in Cambridge and is now at the recently opened sibling eatery in Concord. She raises them in her suburban Carlisle home. "A couple of years ago, I was studying entomophagy, the science of eating insects, and how other countries use crickets as a key protein," Miller says. "I decided to do it." She ordered the insects online and placed them in aquariums, moving them inside or out depending on the weather. Now she's raised about 5,000 of them.

The chirping doesn't bother her, she says, because they don't chirp until they're about two months old, and that's "a telltale sign" they're ready to serve. She kills them by putting them in the freezer. They've been used in pastry and pancake flour, and she's served them whole as a garnish and, upon request, as a side dish. "I couldn't eat too many myself," Miller admits. "I get attached to them. They're my cricket babies."

Miller says the bugs were well received in Cambridge. At least, nobody freaked out. "I was expecting trouble, but the diners were well notified. Some asked for more." Bondir hasn't served them in Concord yet. "I hope to put them on the menu soon," Miller says, "but I think Concord would not be as gung-ho about things like that as the city. They need a little more convincing."

THE TOUR GUIDE

Josh Ziskin, executive chef/owner of Brookline Village's La Morra, couldn't forget the joy of shopping, cooking and eating in Italy. He and his wife, co-owner and wine director Jen, spent six months in Piedmont in 1997, truffle hunting, sausage making and wine pressing. Ziskin had been in the business one way or another since he was 15. But he had not strayed far from his home in Brookline until the Italy trip.

Five years after that sojourn, he opened La Morra, featuring northern Italian cuisine. But he still wanted to combine his "passion for Italian food and travel."

Two years ago, he teamed up with Somerville's DuVine Cycling + Adventure Co. (the owner was a college buddy) to offer "very personal itineraries." The first trip, in 2012, was to Piedmont. A Tuscan tour is planned for this July: "Meet the Butcher, the Baker, the Winemaker!" The cost is about $4,800, with groups limited to 16 people.

On the culinary tour, complete with "breakfast, lunch and dinner and all the wine you can drink," Ziskin, 43, will guide participants on visits to some of La Morra's superlative suppliers and vintners, whose methods or provisions can be sampled back in Brookline in dishes like the ribollita.

"With globalization, we're losing touch with the old style," Ziskin says. "And we want to keep those ways that worked before machinery, like making the braises, the pasta, the grappa. We bring home that style, and so do our tour guests."

THE JAZZMAN

Today Tim Wiechmann is one of Camberville's most lauded chefs. But before he studied and cooked in Paris, headed the kitchen at Jamaica Plain's Ten Tables, took farm-to-table French cuisine to Huron Village as chef/owner of T.W. Food, and brought Union Square sausages and schnitzels as chef/owner of Bronwyn (dubbed one of the best new restaurants of 2013 by Esquire), Wiechmann was a professional jazz and blues man, backing up the likes of Ron Levy.

He played guitar and drums, studied a bit at Berklee and aimed to emulate the inimitable guitarist Wes Montgomery ("I attempted—poorly—to copy him," Wiechmann says). Even after he switched to a culinary career, music remained close to his heart. Wiechmann, now 40, says he moved to a big house in Carlisle so he could play as loud as he wanted. But kitchen duties called.

Then, in 2009, synchronicity struck. Wiechmann decided to host a Sunday jazz brunch at T.W. Food, playing with a trio or quartet, whoever he could land. Even since last year's opening of Bronwyn, his wife's namesake Mittel-European restaurant, the jazz brunch has remained a Cambridge Sunday staple, with a rotating crew that's included notable local musicians like Dean Johnston and John Medeski.

"Cooking and jazz go hand in hand," Wiechmann says. "Jazz is spontaneous. The restaurant business is less spontaneous, but every chef gets to conduct his own symphony."

THE CONNOISSEUR

Chef Jamie Mammano doesn't serve his pet product at any of his five-star eateries. Mistral, Teatro, Sorellina, Mooo, L'Andana and new hotspot Ostra just don't lend themselves to tortillas, he admits. But, boy, is he a proud papa.

"I can't eat those lousy tortillas they sell in the store," says Mammano, chef/owner of the Columbus Hospitality Group, who now manufactures his own. "We use authentic dry white corn from Illinois. We cook it and put it through a volcanic stone grindstone, adding a little limestone to allow the skin to pull."

At his Tortilleria La Niña in Everett, a dozen workers produce some 6,000 pounds of tortillas a week. Previously, most of the output was boxes of tortillas, sold wholesale to restaurants like Myers + Chang and The Painted Burro. But La Niña recently shifted its focus to the retail market, offering 12-ounce packages of chips for about $5.50 at stores like Whole Foods.

Mammano, 54, started the business in 2011, inspired by the tortillas his Mexican mother-in-law shipped to the family, as well as by a trip to a Mexican factory with his father-in-law. The "La Niña" refers to Mammano's daughter, Paola, now 12, pictured on the package with her grandmother, Irene Barba.

The tortillas—made with non-genetically modified corn, preservative- and gluten-free, and kosher—"make the best grilled cheese," Mammano gushes. "And the chip doesn't break! Who else can say that?"

>THE PRESERVATIONIST

Brooke Vosika thought the Four Seasons Hotel Boston, where he's served as executive chef for seven years, should "think outside the grid" on amenities. "People here don't go wild over a bowl of fruit," he says. Hence, pampered hotel guests receive, among other gifts, bars of soap handmade with local sea salt, blended with herbs and spices. In the dining rooms, the olive oil is customized; the peppers might come from the roof garden, the honey from the hotel hive.

All the special touches are "culinary inspired," says Vosika, 51, who raises personal food and wine crops at his farm in Woodstock, NY, which has been in the family for 100 years. "When you raise crops by yourself, it means so much more." He worked on his grandfather's New Jersey farm as a boy, as well as in upstate New York. "There's a lot of culinary history built in American food," he says, "but I'm not sure the young chefs are preserving it."

Vosika's great pleasure is "learning and preserving" those processes. For four years, he's created red and white private-label wine batches. He barrel-ages whiskey and makes his own maple syrup and apple cider. And he experiments with farming techniques "to see what happens" with crops like tomatoes and, now, at his home in Canton, with citrus trees.

"Learning in gardening is seeing what is in season, learning that onions pop up first, then asparagus; cherries blossom before peaches. What does a seasonal dish really mean?" Vosika asks. "It's what's coming out of the ground." ◆

WINTER WONDERS

Winter's no stranger to these parts, and there are more than a few local athletes in Sochi, Russia, for the Winter Olympics. Here are some Bay Staters who could be repping the red, white and blue on the podium this month.

BY MATT MARTINELLI
PHOTOGRAPHED BY JOHN HUET

EMILY COOK

34, AERIAL SKIING, BELMONT

On when she learned how to ski: I grew up skiing at Sugarloaf in Maine, but I took my first turns at Nashoba. I remember learning to ski there, actually. It was a long time ago. But really my training started there —if you can consider it training when you're 4. But I started skiing and doing gymnastics when I was 4.

On her return from an injury that forced her to miss the 2002 Winter Olympics: I certainly, during three years of rehab, did not wake up every morning really excited to go to physical therapy, to learn to walk again, to get my strength back and learn to ski again, and to learn to jump again. ... I remember my first jump back, when I realized I was healthy. It was a year before the Olympics in Torino. All my teammates kind of lined the pool and waited for it to happen. My coaches were there. I did this one little straight, upright jump. I didn't even flip. I landed and everyone cheered. It was just so long in coming.

On whether making the Olympics for a fourth time feels the same as the first time: It's sort of different. I'm incredibly excited to go to Sochi, but it's more of a matter of continuing training and continuing to do all the things that are going to have me prepared to perform well there. When I qualified for Salt Lake, it was beyond-words exciting. I was jumping around, and it was kind of a different kind of celebration this time around. This time around, I've done all the work, and I expected to be there.

On the prospect that this will be her final appearance in the Olympics: This will definitely be my last Olympics. I'm not sure when in the next couple of months to a year that I'll retire. I'm not sure what events I'll do after the Olympics, but you will not see me at another Olympics.

STEVE LANGTON

30, BOBSLED, MELROSE

On his first time bobsledding: My first trip in a bobsled was in October of 2007 in Lake Placid, N.Y. I vividly remember being convinced after a few turns that the sled I was in was broken. I couldn't believe that the sport I had grown up watching during the Olympics was that loud, jarring and fast.

On how running track at Northeastern prepared him for bobsledding: Seeing that foot speed is a very important aspect of pushing a bobsled, I would say that track prepared me well for pushing sleds. For bobsled, you also have to have an extremely strong and powerful lower body, because you need such strength and speed to push a sled that heavy fast.

On training alongside his younger brother Chris: It's been a wonderful opportunity for both of us. Given the six-year difference in age between us, this has been the first chance we've had to share not only teammates, but goals and friends. He's an extremely talented athlete and has been quite an asset to our program. I'm very proud of all he's accomplished.

On when he started thinking about the 2014 Olympics: Immediately following our crash in Vancouver in the 2010 Olympics, I made the decision to dedicate the next four years to becoming the best in the world.

MEGHAN DUGGAN

26, HOCKEY, DANVERS

On training in Bedford this year: I went away to boarding school for high school. I flew halfway across the country to the University of Wisconsin in Madison for college. And last Olympic year, we lived out in Minneapolis. It's been nice this time around. My parents haven't gotten to see me play as much as they might have wanted to my entire career, so it's great that they catch even some of the games against the boys' teams that are local.

On memories from '98, the last time the U.S. won gold: I got a chance to meet Gretchen Ulion, who was local. She came and spoke to a group that I was with, and I got to meet her after, put her jersey on, hold her gold medal, and it kind of fueled my fire. I always wanted to play hockey, but as soon as I knew it was in the Olympics for women, I knew that was something I wanted to do.

On playing against guys growing up: Obviously, they're allowed to hit each other, so sometimes when I get called for a body-checking penalty, I miss that side of the guys' games.

On what winning the gold in 2014 would be like, after winning a silver medal in 2010: I can't even imagine. I just got goose bumps thinking about it. It'd be an incredible feeling, and it's definitely attainable for us. We just need to stay on the right track. We're fine-tuning a few things. We're excited. It's in the cards for us.

SIMON SHNAPIR

26, FIGURE SKATING PAIRS, SUDBURY

On how he got into figure skating: I was 6 years old, and my parents took me to skating lessons. I think my parents had a big influence on why I started skating. It's because of my Russian heritage; that's just like a national pastime there. I watched skating a little bit on TV, and the skaters on TV always got me excited too. Scott Hamilton always pops up in my mind. I always remember watching him and enjoying him.

On what he thought when he tried out with partner Marissa Castelli in 2006: It was nice because she already knew how to do pairs. I remember her being really small. She's still really small. And I haven't really grown that much in height. I just remember thinking, "If this works out, it'll be cool because I can really throw her around."

On relying so much on just one other person: For us, making mistakes, technical mistakes, that happens. We've been together long enough to know that we can't blame each other. If Marissa falls on a jump, I'm not going to say it's your fault and go running away. That's not how it works -- at least not if you want to be successful. I think the hardest part is learning how to react to one another when you're in a certain kind of mood.... I mean, it's like a marriage without the romantic part.

On winning the nationals in his home state and then going to the Olympics in his birthplace: It's extra special. I was born in Russia, and I have a little bit of family left there, but I grew up here and I'm 100 percent proud to represent the U.S. and skate for the American team. This is my home, and I've lived here my entire life. But there is still a connection there, and the fact that I still speak the language is nice. Everything that's coming together is really, really special.

Fine Wining

THERE'S NEVER BEEN A riper time to stay in town Presidents Day weekend. Toast to our American forefathers at the Boston Wine Expo, featuring nearly 2,000 wines to which even the most zealous of oenophiles can pledge allegiance. Guests can expand their palates at the grand tasting with sips from more than 200 domestic and international wineries and bites from local restaurants. True connoisseurs can revel in the rare vintages in the private vintner reserve lounge, or go the educational route at expert-taught seminars that cover specific regions, particular varietals and proper food and vino pairings (a topic more fully explored at the winemaker dinner series). And with a portion of the proceeds going to Tufts Medical Center's Summer Camp Program for Children with Disabilities, you can sip for a cause. Rima Butto

PERFORMING ARTS

BOULEVARD OF BROADWAY DREAMS

After years of selling out stadiums, clubs and concert halls, Green Day set out to conquer new terrain: the Broadway stage. Adapted from the band's Grammy-winning 2004 album, the resulting rock musical, American Idiot, picked up a couple of Tonys with its tale of friends Johnny, Tunny and Will, three disaffected young dudes looking to escape suburbia. But each finds his big plans thwarted—one by an unplanned pregnancy, one by the wounds of war and one by his own self-destructive streak (personified by the drug dealer St. Jimmy, once played by the band's own Billie Armstrong). Be sure to wake up before February ends to catch the national touring production, hitting the Boston Opera House Feb. 7-9. / Hannah Weintraub

FUNNY GIRL It's a familiar checklist for 20-something college grads: a career path, an apartment, a semi-functional relationship. All seem to be eluding aspiring adult Frances Handley in quirky dramedy Frances Ha. Five years out of Vassar, Frances is going nowhere in her dance career and growing apart from her best friend. Played with aplomb by Greta Gerwig (who co-wrote the script with director Noah Baumbach), Frances dances a fine line between maddening and endearing as she attempts to put her messy life in order. Watch her pick up the pieces on Feb. 7 during the Brattle Theatre's (Some of) The Best of 2013 series. / Frankie Barbato

12 Years a Slave ★★★★ Despite being adapted by screenwriter John Ridley from Solomon Northup's own 1853 memoir, the astonishing 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have seen movies about the horrors of slavery before. But this one is about the mechanics. It is about process. Director Steve McQueen actually downplays the brutality of plantation life, all things considered. 12 Years a Slave merely asks you to meet its level gaze and accept the fact that all this actually happened. Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this cruel and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? Don't look away. (In the suburbs.)

American Hustle ★ 1/2 A gaudy spectacle of egregious overacting and silly wig humor, writer-director David O. Russell's indulgent riff on the FBI's "Abscam" sting operation is the year's biggest embarrassment. Christian Bale hems, haws and makes a lot of De Niro faces as a con-artist dry-cleaning magnate suckered by Bradley Cooper's overzealous agent into setting up a crooked New Jersey mayor (Jeremy Renner). With the overlapping narration tracks, freeze frames, classic-rock soundtrack and cascading camera moves, Russell proves that not only has he seen Goodfellas and Casino, but that he liked them an awful lot. The ins and outs of the grifts aren't particularly interesting, so American Hustle ramps up a contrived love story with Bale and Cooper bickering for the affections of Amy Adams' duplicitous bad girl, who adopts a phony British accent and refuses to wear bras. Jennifer Lawrence eats scenery as Bale's harpy wife, once again stuck in a part for which she is at least 10 years too young. Everybody's miscast and overcompensating, while Russell's directorial karaoke comes off as Scorsese for dummies. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Anchorman 2: The Legend Continues ★★ Aren't comedy sequels the worst? Since you liked all those jokes the first time around, why not hear them again? Much in the way that increasingly diminished returns squashed whatever fond memories we had of the first Austin Powers and Hangover pictures, Will Ferrell and co-writer/director Adam McKay trot out numbskull newscaster Ron Burgundy for a victory lap through all those old quotes that obnoxious drunk people have been shouting at you in bars ever since the underperforming 2004 original became a cult hit. There's a nifty satirical idea here, as our moron correspondent decides that the news is too boring and sets the template for 24-hour cable stations by focusing exclusively on car chases, pets and empty patriotic slogans. Unfortunately, like every other idea in the movie, it's woefully underdeveloped, leaving the unseemly 112-minute running time to be padded out with non sequiturs and unstructured improv sessions that go nowhere. Top-heavy with pointless celebrity cameos, Anchorman 2 mistakes recognition for humor. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

August: Osage County ★★ Playwright Tracy Letts' honored opus is a cracker Eugene O'Neill riff hopped up on prescription meds and whiskey. It crams 10 or so members of the wildly dysfunctional Weston family into a sweltering, tiny space for all sorts of simultaneous outré revelations and profane recriminations. This literal hothouse ran for more than three hours every night on Broadway to both acclaim and exhaustion. Alas, awards have a way of ruining everything, and thus a severely truncated and defanged August: Osage County is now being presented to movie audiences with an all-star cast as a collection of Academy-friendly "For Your Consideration" meltdown clips. What played as a free-for-all cacophony upon the stage is flattened out by John Wells' pedestrian direction. Almost everyone not named Meryl Streep is pretty terrific in this picture, but that hour and change shorn from Letts' original script leaves most of these performers scrambling to define their characters without the writer's ammunition. Most of this movie feels like it was left on the cutting room floor. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Grudge Match ★★ 1/2 I'm not sure anybody ever really wondered what might happen if Rocky Balboa fought Jake LaMotta. The winner of the Cold War vs. cinema's most inarticulate wife beater hardly seems like a selling point, save that Sylvester Stallone and Robert De Niro both played boxers a long time ago and have seen better days, career-wise. This mediocre time killer casts the two raging prunes as septuagenarian rivals encouraged to put the gloves on again after a public scuffle goes viral on YouTube. When they last faced off in 1997's Cop Land, Stallone improbably acted circles around De Niro, coming in underneath the latter's broad, jokey performance with a genuinely affecting sweetness. The same thing happens again here, as the two vie for the affections of a shockingly well-preserved Kim Basinger. Alan Arkin is on hand to run through his patented profane grandpa routine, while Kevin Hart keeps the energy up with a volley of obvious ad-libs. Grudge Match isn't much of a movie, but you can do worse. Both of these stars certainly have. (In the suburbs.)

Her ★★★★ We all spend too much time with our smartphones, but Joaquin Phoenix falls hard for Siri in this one-joke movie that blossoms into something of a miracle. Written and directed by Being John Malkovich and Where the Wild Things Are savant Spike Jonze, Her is a tender and ruefully funny meditation on modern relationships and what it means to love in a world where we're all in constant communication, yet seemingly lonelier than ever. The film is set in a quasi-futuristic Apple Store Los Angeles, where sentient operating systems work as personal secretaries. Samantha (voiced in an astounding performance by Scarlett Johansson) takes a shine to Phoenix's awkward, introverted Theodore, and the two develop a chemistry that's all the more remarkable because she never actually appears onscreen. Her is almost overstuffed with philosophical musings on the role of technology in the way we live now. But in its big aching heart, it's a love story, and a great one. Relationships end and people grow apart, even when they live inside your phone. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games: Catching Fire ★★ 1/2 What a difference a director makes. When we last caught up with Katniss Everdeen, she was reluctantly killing kids in Seabiscuit helmer Gary Ross' aesthetically ugly, sloppily staged adaptation of Suzanne Collins' young-adult megaseller. One year and a few hundred million dollars later, this series has fallen into the hands of filmmaker Francis Lawrence, of I Am Legend and the underrated Constantine fame. Lawrence has an eye for striking visuals but has never found a script to match his talent. He doesn't find one here either, but Catching Fire is still a huge improvement over its predecessor in nearly every way. Jennifer Lawrence's Katniss is back, shouldering the burden of martyrdom in a future dystopia where the rich enlist the poor to kill each other off in televised spectacles. Pulpy melodrama continues apace, but this time around with lush, burnished images and a budget to match the ambition. It's quite engrossing until the movie abruptly stops midscene, teasing another sequel coming soon to a theater near you.

Sigh, the perils of franchise maintenance. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

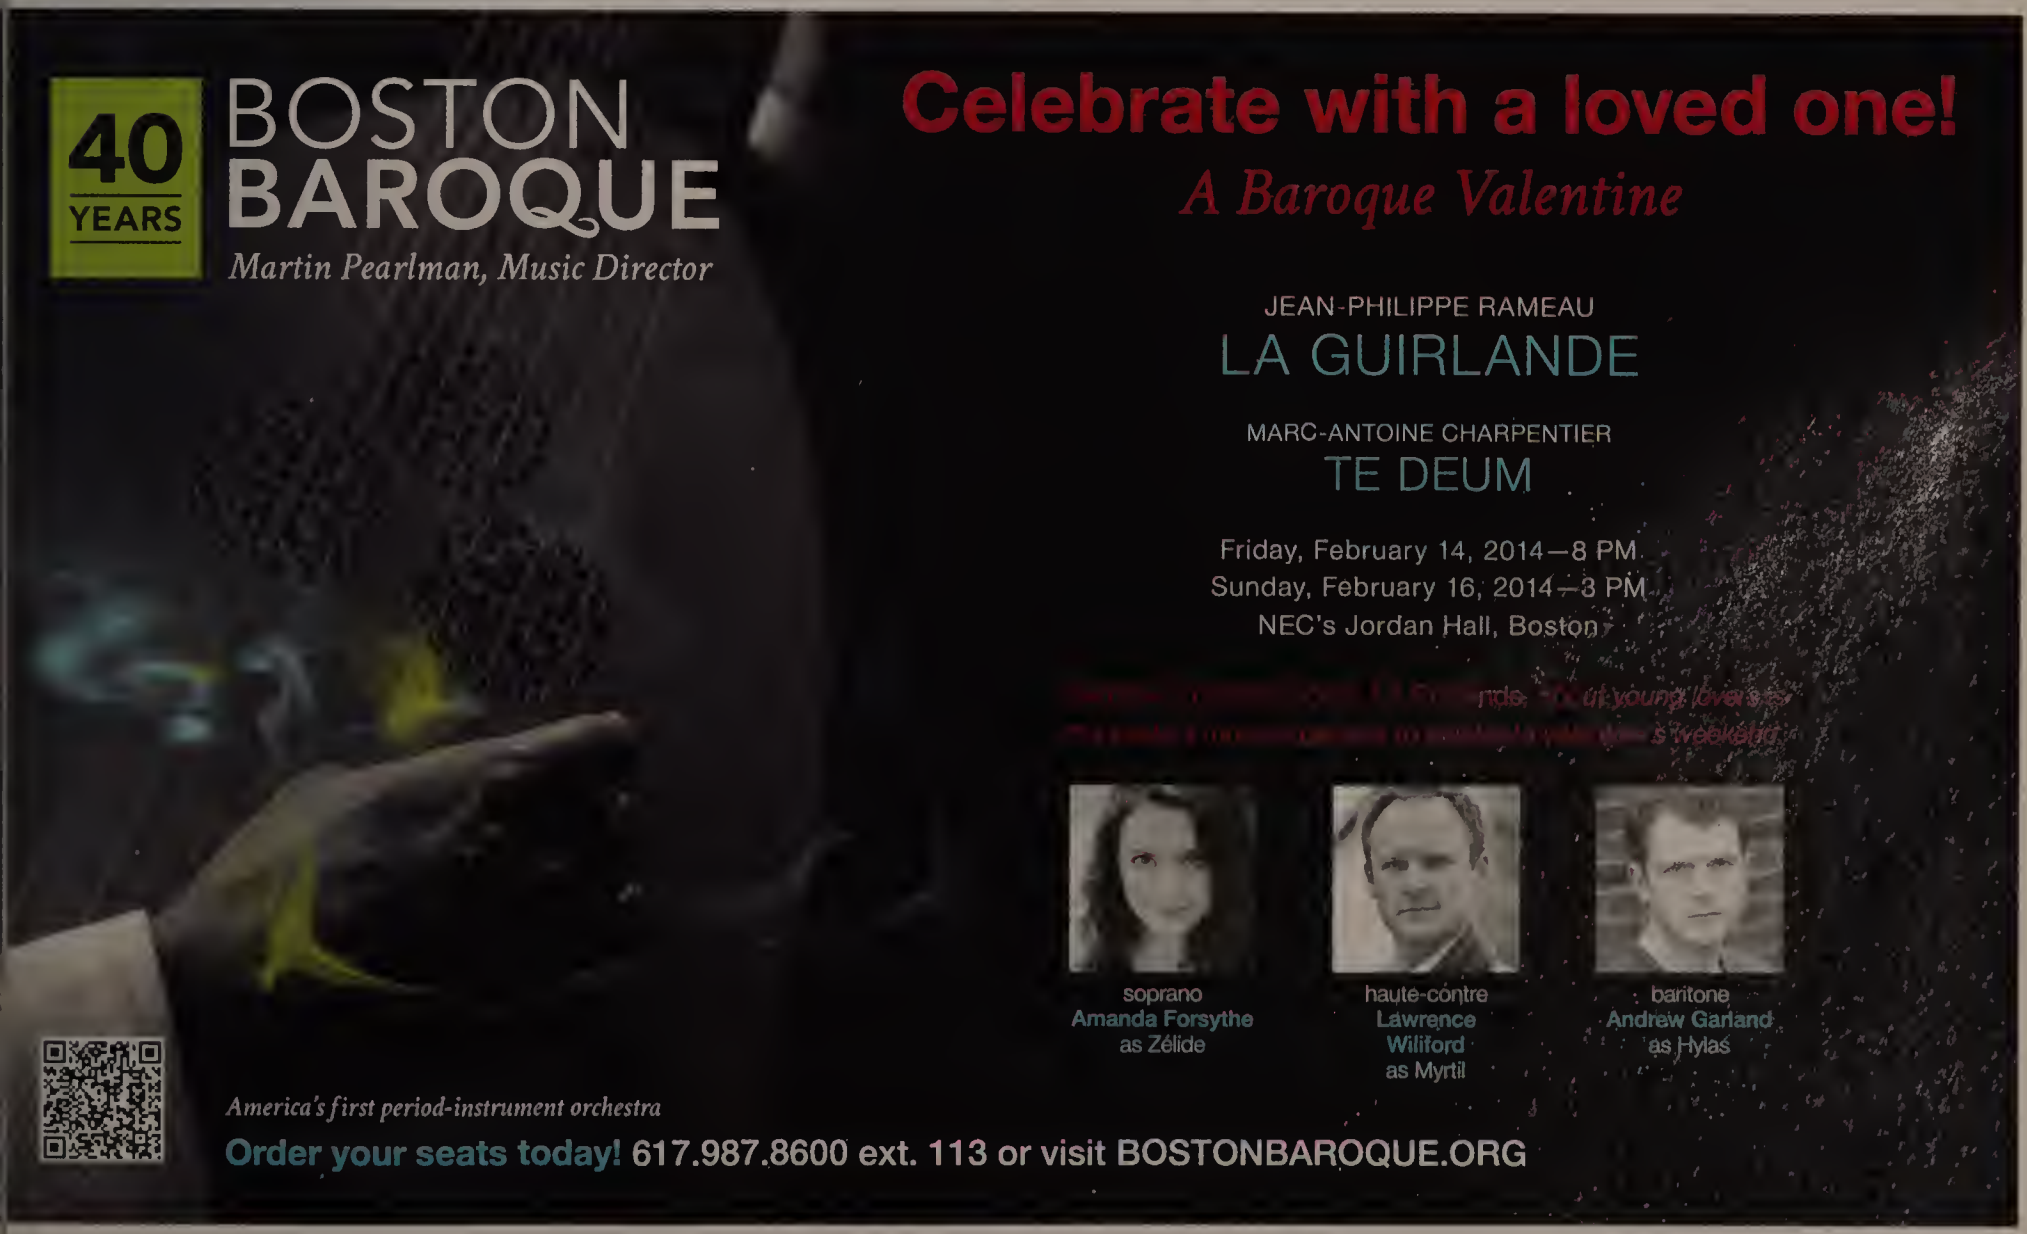
Inside Llewyn Davis ★★★★ My favorite movie in years is the Coen brothers' most melancholic reverie, ditching their usual clockwork plotting for a loosey-goosey drift through a rotten week in the life of an itinerant troubadour skirting around the edges of the Greenwich Village scene in 1961. Oscar Isaac's Llewyn Davis is living hand-to-mouth without even a winter coat. Sharp, sour and more than a little bit of a dick, Llewyn is couch-surfing across Washington Square while pompously asserting his folk-singer superiority (Isaac strums a bunch from the Dave Van Ronk songbook, quite wonderfully). As the bleak, semi-surreal collection of anecdotes proceeds from bad to worse with the filmmakers' patented precision, the deadpan indifference of the Coens' cruel universe has never been so deeply felt, so soulfully sung or more mordantly hilarious. Bending itself into a Möbius strip of back-alley beatdowns, Inside Llewyn Davis is a movie for acerbic also-rans shat upon by life—a salute to all the people who never made it. It's a triumphant ode to failure. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and West Newton.)

The Invisible Woman ★★★ 1/2 The kind of quiet, thoughtful pleasure that's too often overlooked in the winter glut of higher-profile Oscar-season releases, this delicately wrought sophomore effort from director Ralph Fiennes slipped into area theaters under the radar. It's worth seeking out. Based on Claire Tomalin's book, it dishes the dirt on a whispered-about affair between Charles Dickens (Fiennes) and teenage actress Nelly Ternan (Felicity Jones). This is a movie of repressed desires expressed in the space between words. Every conversation seems to be in code. In thrall more to the man's writing than the man himself, Jones delivers an exquisitely internalized performance. He loves her more than she loves him back, and the imbalance weighs on Nelly's heart. The Invisible Woman's deliberate pacing and muted tone might try the patience of viewers enticed by the scandalous subject matter who are expecting a more typically Dickensian melodrama. But if you can get on the movie's wavelength, there is great power in the stillness, and in Ralph Fiennes as a major filmmaker. (At Kendall Square.)

Lone Survivor ★★ Good intentions don't always make good movies. The story goes that director Peter Berg agreed to the indignity of directing Battleship, just so long as the studio agreed to fund this bruising, bloody tribute to Navy SEALs fighting in Afghanistan. Working from Marcus Luttrell's memoir (the title of which is a huge spoiler), the film follows four guys stranded in Taliban territory, shooting it out for some 50-odd minutes of screen time in a blow-by-blow account of an operation gone wrong. Lone Survivor means well, but is unbearably dull. Mark Wahlberg, Ben Foster and Emile Hirsch strangle their wild screen personas as interchangeable embodiments of all that is stoic and decent about America. Only Berg's Friday Night Lights discovery Taylor Kitsch is allowed a personality, so of course he doesn't stick around long. The movie ignores geopolitical context in favor of long, slow-motion sequences of heroes dying noble deaths to an overwrought electric guitar score by Explosions in the Sky. By the end it feels like a recruiting ad in which everybody dies. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Nebraska ★★ Everything about Nebraska, Alexander Payne's sixth feature and first stinker, feels secondhand. It's a gimmicky sitcom script gussied up with self-consciously "artful" affectations borrowed from the New Hollywood heyday of the early '70s. Except it doesn't even get those right. The picture's entire aesthetic design comes off like a wise-ass kid dressing up in his cool uncle's old clothes and wearing them wrong. The terminally bland Will Forte stars as a stereo salesman who takes a road trip with his gruff, alcoholic father (Bruce Dern), who thinks he's won a million dollars from a Publishers Clearing House-type sweepstakes letter he recently got in the mail. There's a tension between Dern's crumbling old-school masculinity and Forte's modern-guy ineffectualness that goes maddeningly unexplored. It's just really boring and sad. The pacing is so gummed up by homages to The Last Picture Show that if you removed all the shots of deteriorating storefronts, this 115-minute film would barely be feature length. Despite the ostentatious visual scheme and constant callbacks to cinematic giants, Nebraska feels flatter than the landscapes it depicts. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Past ★★★ As you might recall from 2011's Oscar-winning A Separation, Iranian filmmaker Asghar Farhadi's family dramas unfold in a classical, patient tradition punctuated by bombshell revelations—sort of like if Ibsen or Chekhov wrote mystery novels. His latest, The Past, transplants the action to Paris, where The Artist's Bérénice Bejo awaits the arrival of her estranged husband (Ali Mosaffa). After four years of minimal contact, these two are supposed to be finally getting a divorce so she can marry her new beau (Tahar Rahim, from A Prophet). As in Farhadi's previous picture, nothing is quite as it appears on the surface.



Information is parceled out gradually, so we're left to puzzle over strange emotional exchanges as a bigger, thornier picture only slowly becomes clear. There's a lot more than meets the eye going on in this household, too much maybe. But even as his plot teeters into melodrama, the filmmaker keeps tight control of the formal compositions and deftly underplayed performances. Expanding in scope as it goes along, the movie grows on you. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Saving Mr. Banks ★½ Purporting to be the true story of how Walt Disney convinced uptight author P.L. Travers to let him adapt her precious Mary Poppins books for the big screen, Saving Mr. Banks is a steaming plate of corporate propaganda with a side of character assassination. It's also a movie about a contract negotiation, and about as interesting as that sounds. Though in real life she was reportedly a bar-crawling bisexual single mother, the film presents Travers as a miserable spinster played by a tut-tutting Emma Thompson, who seems to be channeling the host of Weakest Link. Tom Hanks' twinkly Uncle Walt not only wins her over with whimsy, but also therapeutically resolves Travers' issues about her long-dead alcoholic father (well played by Colin Farrell in flashbacks) until tears and soppy music ensue. Saving Mr. Banks advocates artists selling out to a corporation that always knows best. Hanks smuggles in a few grace notes of prickly determination in a movie that's otherwise an infomercial for the company that produced it. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Secret Life of Walter Mitty ★★ Full of fortune-cookie wisdom about living your dreams, this years-in-the-making labor of love for director-star Ben Stiller undercuts the pious sermons with so much product placement I kept reaching for the remote to try to fast-forward through the commercials. Unfortunately, you can't do that in a movie theater. Stiller plays a sad-sack everyman on the verge of losing his job at Life magazine after misplacing a cover photo by a legendary war correspondent. For reasons that don't make much sense, Stiller ends up running all over Greenland, Iceland and Afghanistan and learning how to become a better person or something. The movie is beautifully photographed, well-directed and utterly inane. It's difficult to build momentum when characters won't stop shilling for eHarmony and Papa John's, and the film bottoms out when Patton Oswalt drops by to extol the virtues of Cinnabon. I also had a hard time sitting still for a condescending lecture about risk-taking from Stiller, Hollywood royalty who never had to get a job. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Wolf of Wall Street ★★★★ An obscenity, an abomination and the movie this country deserves right now. Martin Scorsese's epic assault on propriety and good taste stars Leonardo DiCaprio as stockbroker scumbag Jordan Belfort, one of the countless who looted the American Dream and gagged on the spoils of wretched excess. It's another Scorsese gangster picture, only this time it's white-collar and played out as a broad, bilious farce. Pumped up with adrenaline and cocaine, the picture blasts off like a rocket ship into such a frenzied orgy of sex, drugs and decadence that both Hunter S. Thompson and Federico Fellini might consider it a bit much. The Wolf of Wall Street zings at warp speed from one fiendishly entertaining, appalling set piece to another, until the movie's gargantuan three-hour running time reveals Scorsese's moral severity. It's all too much too-much-ness about people for whom too much was never enough. The grotesque excess becomes deadening and the emptiness chilling. DiCaprio is fearlessly smarmy, Jonah Hill makes a revolting sidekick, and they heroically debase themselves in the funniest, angriest movie of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

SOUL MATES Nicki Bluhm's love of music landed her the love of her life. She caught the attention of her future husband, Tim, during an on-a-whim guitar session at a house party—the first time she ever sang in front of a group. Now the pair and several friends make sweet music together as Nicki Bluhm and the Gramblers. In 2012, the folk-rock/Americana group became a YouTube sensation with their Van Sessions, stripped-down covers of classic rock songs recorded in their tour van. Since then, they've gained recognition for their own feel-good tunes with the 2013 release of their self-titled album. Fall in love with Nicki Bluhm and the Gramblers on Feb. 15 at the Sinclair. / Abagail Sullivan

VYING COLORS

Without Kodachrome co-inventor Leopold Godowsky Jr.'s influence, the world might be a little less colorful. To honor his vision, the Leopold Godowsky Jr. Color Photography Awards recognize emerging talents every four years. The Fighting Season, winner Louie Palu's entry, transports viewers to Kandahar, Afghanistan, during the rise of the Taliban insurgency. Other honorees include Born and Raised, which explores Aaron Blum's vision of his native Appalachia; Home Stills, in which Bastienne Schmidt poses as a housewife for conceptual self-portraits; and Alejandro Cartagena's The Car Poolers, which takes a bird's-eye view of laborers' pickup trucks along Mexico's Highway 85. Brighten your reality through March 22 at Boston University's Photographic Resource Center. / Ashley Rossi

A T OF TWO CITIES

Who knew the Boston/New York rivalry ran this deep? In 1888, Henry Melville Whitney decided to dig America's first subway system in Boston. But William Collins Whitney—his New Yorker brother—had the same train of thought, and the competition began. In The Race Underground: Boston, New York, and the Incredible Rivalry That Built America's First Subway, Doug Most of The Boston Globe chronicles the resulting story of danger, power and corruption—and the history of our very own T. Restaurants

BACK DECK Professional Backyard Grilling [2 West Street (Corner of Washington), Boston, 617-670-0320, BackDeckBoston.com] Drawing inspiration from a New England back yard and featuring a menu of grill-focused favorites and patio sipping cocktails, Back Deck is an urban oasis in downtown Boston. With floor to ceiling windows and an open kitchen, Back Deck brings the outdoors inside and provides the perfect setting to enjoy the fun and flavor of hardwood charcoal grilling year round.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

FORUM [755 Boylston St Boston MA 02116, 857-991-1831, forumboston.com] Gather, indulge, repeat! Forum is located across from the Mandarin Oriental hotel and Lord & Taylor shops, overlooking glitzy Boylston Street, a hotspot for locals, tourists and celebrities. Two distinct floors, al fresco dining, two bars, and a modern function room for up to 60 guests. Indulge in New American cuisine such as Duck Confit, Halibut on Lobster Chorizo Risotto, Bone Marrow Encrusted Filet, or Wild Mushrooms Gnocchi. Open Daily.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with coworkers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $. Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

CENTRAL WHARF CO., the Financial District's newest eatery!

OSTRA [1 Charles Street South, Boston, 617.421.1200, www.ostraboston.com] Ostra, located in Boston's Back Bay, is a contemporary Mediterranean seafood restaurant. Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano and Executive Chef Mitchell Randall focus on specialty seafood found throughout the Mediterranean and regions within the U.S. The dining room at Ostra evokes a sense of style and sophistication in a comfortable and inviting setting. Ostra also offers a fine bar and lounge area featuring live piano entertainment. Ostra's private dining room accommodates up to 42 for a seated event and 70 for a cocktail reception. Dinner Sunday through Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

Bars & Clubs

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

ARS LONGA, JETBLUE TO MIAMI BREVIS

Some 50,000 people fly into Miami for Art Basel, and an astonishing number of them are from Boston. In fact, you can't swing a dead cat (preferably by Damien Hirst) without hitting someone from the South End, Back Bay, Beacon Hill or the 'burbs (and yes, Cambridge represents).

That's largely because the Museum of Fine Arts, the Institute of Contemporary Art and the deCordova Museum all lead tours of the five-day art orgy for major donors, trustees and other muckety-mucks. And because Miami Basel is madly social, all three institutions do some fairly lavish entertaining as well.

The ICA kicked things off with a cocktail party by the pool at the Surfcomber, with a swanky guest list that included hedge-fund tycoon Mark Schwartz and his media-mogul wife, Marie, sister act Joni and Hope Cline, gregarious gallery owner Camilo Alvarez, the improbably tall Onnie Mayshak, private-wealth poobah Max Bardeen, the interchangeable Matt Greer and Mark Andrus, and a bevy of beauties that included Tristin Mannion, Betsy Gifford, Tess Atkinson and the Allisons—Johnson and O'Neil. While the palm trees swayed and the bartender shook his bon-bon, artist Jessica Jackson Hutchins (whose 2012 ICA exhibit was a huge hit) dangled her feet in the water.

On the way to the James Royal Palm for the MFA's patron dinner and reception, we ran into former ICA curator Nicholas Baume (now at NY's Public Art Fund), who almost made us late for cocktails by the swimming pool, where the well-heeled mixed with the well-dressed and the well-met. On hand were such worthies as discerning philanthropist Joyce Linde, the soignée Lorraine Bressler, Desi beauty Mona Kumar, the dashing Myles Slosberg with his gorgeous wife, Diane Krane, Cambridge collectors Ann and Graham Gund, Museum School grad Brian Burkhardt (who now lives in Miami) with his uber-hip wife, Trisha Brookbank, the delightful Jody Vipperman Saarmaa and one woman who sashayed up to the bar and said, "Eight-inch heels and alcohol—a winning combination." Drinks were followed by a superb dinner courtesy of chef Kris Wessel, and MFA contemporary-art department honcha Emily Zilber answered the burning question "How many curators can you fit into a Zipcar?" (The answer: more than you'd expect.)

South Beach hot spot du jour BLT Steak at the Betsy Hotel was the site for a super-swanky brunch hosted by the ICA. Taking an air-conditioned break from the fair were Louis Boston doyenne Debi Greenberg, South Shore stunner Becky Hildek, beautiful blonde Robin Hauck and naturally carbonated curator Cathryn Griffith, who rested and refueled themselves for an afternoon of perusing art.

Meanwhile, the folks at the Fontainebleau were busy preparing for that evening's outdoor reception for supporters of the deCordova. Seen sipping, supping and schmoozing in a fully loaded cabana were contemporary-art savant Geoff Hargadon, Irish thoroughbred Ciara Hunt, equestrian hottie Paul Butterworth, the delectable Paul and Pia Miller, design guru Ken Dietz, redheaded siren Karen DeTemple, incorrigible scamp Tristan Govignon, the smolderingly sexy Frank Amelia and one woman who said, "If everyone looked like us, there wouldn't be Photoshop."

"How many curators can you fit into a Zipcar?" (The answer: more than you'd expect.)

Indeed, it was hard to decide which was more interesting to look at, the art or the people. From the vintage GTO filled with polka-dotted Santas rolling down Ocean Drive to the fluorescent video arcade by NY street artists FAILE, it was a nonstop visual feast punctuated by cocktail parties and air kisses.

The MFA combined all of the above with a brunch held at the CIFO Art Space, where guests got a sneak peek at Permission to Be Global—the exhibit of Latin American art from the collection of Ella Fontanals-Cisneros that comes to the MFA in March.

By that point, though, some of us had OD'd on art and hors d'oeuvres, while several members of the Boston contingent had added to their collections.

And then there was the couple who came dangerously close to a major purchase. "We had to use our safe word," the husband said. "Money." ◆

SINGLED OUT

FEBRUARY IS A WEIRD MONTH IN magazine land. I'm still purging my inbox of bizarre Valentine's press releases—a missive on a "bribery-dating site" that claims the way to a Boston woman's heart is a free tank of gas, a pitch about a "refrigerator dating expert" who maintains that the contents of a love interest's KitchenAid are the window to the soul. (The fact that he's lived "the single life for over 20 years" is cited as a credential, not as a consequence of repeatedly getting caught fridge snooping.)

Fortunately, the profiles of our 20 alluring local singles made for more interesting reading. Chefs, musicians, nonprofit pros, sports stars, entrepreneurs, even a gentleman farmer, they come from diverse walks of life and have intriguing hidden talents, not to mention more than their fair share of charisma. Some were born and bred in the area; others came here from halfway around the world. Even if you're off the market, I hope they serve as a reminder that Boston's world-class universities, hospitals, tech companies, arts institutions and other claims to fame attract passionate people from all over—and that in this town, you never know what fascinating character waits just a bar stool or T seat away.

Elsewhere, Jonathan Soroff chats with our cover subject, TV personality and producer Jenny Johnson, about her new show (not to mention her forays into pig butchery and grasshopper roasting). Hannah Sheinberg goes behind the scenes of José Mateo Dance Theatre's current production, which features some alluring ladies of its own. And Sarah Hagman talks to a world-famous multi-hyphenate about bringing two Chekhov love stories to life on stage. So consider this issue a belated valentine, from us to you.

JOSÉ MATEO LETS LOOSE WITH UNBRIDLED »»

Passion Piece

José Mateo's latest production doesn't feature a sleeping princess waiting for a kiss, a sugar plum fairy tale or a meet-cute at a ball. The women in Unbridled, which opened on Valentine's Day and runs through March 2, wouldn't be satisfied with just a kiss. Themes of sexuality and intimacy spark up the stage in Mateo's original ballets Schubert Adagio, Mozart Concerto and Still Waters. The last, for instance, nods to the legendary sirens who lured sailors to the rocks. "[The] three ballets, in different ways, deal with women protagonists who find themselves in situations where they must straddle the line between cool composure and unabashed passion," says Mateo, who founded the José Mateo Ballet Theatre in 1986. "I believe audiences—including the finickiest of balletomanes—want to see dancers unbridled, their fears and passions exposed."

There's plenty of passion behind the scenes, too. For Mateo, who choreographs all of the Cambridge-based company's original ballets, the process begins with a love affair with the music. "I look for music that has a broad dynamic range and will make me want to soar and devour space, sometimes quietly, sometimes explosively," Mateo says. He'll play a piece on repeat, over and over, until he's ready to commit, then improvise on his own, drawing inspiration from everyday intrigues. "[Dramatic theater] is all around us," he says. "I constantly take pleasure in observing people." Then comes further experimentation with the company dancers in a heated period of rehearsal. A piece might be conceived from start to finish in as little as three weeks.

The show features scores from three different eras—romantic (Schubert's Quintet in C), classical (Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 20) and modern (Debussy's Sirènes)—but all lend themselves to a romantic evening. "Sensuality seems to be intrinsic to ballet," says Mateo. When compared with the women of Unbridled, Cinderella and Clara might just seem like prudes. / Hannah Sheinberg

TWO OF A KIND

LES ZYGOMATES AND SORRISO REBOOT.

NOW THAT IAN JUST HAS SOLD LES ZYGOMATES and SORRISO to a couple of businessmen, who in turn have hired Robert Fathman as executive chef, changes are afoot for the pair of Leather District eateries. Something between a touch-up and a wholesale makeover is planned, according to culinary veteran Fathman (Grill 23, Azure, The Federalist at XV Beacon, Legal Harborside).

"There's good bones in those joints, a great culinary staff," he says. Les Zygomates will stay true to its identity with "a solid core of French bistro items, real solid cooking... no molecular stuff in the kitchen," he adds. Physical changes are in the works: A redesign will address diners' complaints about tight seating space and add a small private dining room, a glass-encased wine room and new artwork.

Sorriso will be "rebranded and remodeled," Fathman says. The Italian menu will be broadened to incorporate influences from Greece and Turkey with dishes such as grilled lamb ribs with za'atar spice, grilled kale, onions and yogurt crema. More samples: lobster pizza with braised leeks, mushrooms and farm egg, as well as porchetta panini with pickled fennel and caramelized onion. Fathman hews to a philosophy that emphasizes what's local and seasonal, and all breads and most pastas will be made in-house. The new, likely renamed restaurant will be unveiled in three to four months.

GET STUFFED

Stuffed: The Ultimate Comfort Food Cookbook takes the special-occasion turducken concept and applies it to everyday cooking, but has uneven results. Sometimes there's simply too much, well, stuff: burgers stuffed with macaroni and cheese? Chocolate cake stuffed with an entire cherry pie? Since when does overeating require that much effort? Pork-belly-stuffed cornbread bites aside, local author Dan Whalen's book isn't solely focused on gut-busting indulgence. Cobb summer rolls are a nice take on a Vietnamese staple, and the cross-cultural flavors of dishes such as red curry beef pupusas and chana masala-stuffed grape leaves are intriguing. Spicy black bean deviled eggs are simple and delicious. It's best to dip into this book for tips on flavor combinations, and not overstuff yourself by devouring it all in one sitting.

THE REST IS HISTORY: M.C. Spiedo chef/owners Clark Frasier, left, and Mark Gaier were inspired by the Renaissance.

RENAISSANCE MEN

CHEFS GO BACK IN TIME FOR ITALIAN FARE.

YOU WON'T FIND A MORE PERFECT MATCH than a restaurant that focuses on historical Italian cooking inside a hotel called the Renaissance.

The artisans behind M.C. Spiedo are James Beard Award winners Mark Gaier and Clark Frasier, who have turned heads for decades at their restaurants in Ogunquit, Maine, but now are plying their craft in the Seaport.

"There is that sort of dividing line between Fort Point and the Seaport," Frasier says. "There are some well-done restaurants in the Seaport, but they tend to be more corporate. They deliver a nice product, but if you want the energy, excitement and creativity of real chefs, there is no other thing in the area at the moment."

That creativity is evident in one of the ways the food is delivered to your plate. In a style that Gaier playfully dubs "Western dim sum," diners are offered simple bites and drinks from a cart shortly after they're seated. The "immediate gratification" options include items such as deviled eggs or a salad as well as signature cocktails or a sparkling wine.

The nod to Italian history is readily apparent throughout the courses. The Leonardo Salad comes from a list of items da Vinci had written in the margins of a sketchbook. A chicken dish on the menu is slowly braised with dates, figs and apricots. Frasier dates that dish to Dec. 23, 1326, when it was served at a knighting in Siena. The pizzas are served with toppings such as grapes and walnuts rather than pepperoni and red sauce.

"There won't be a Margherita pizza because they didn't have tomatoes and Margherita wasn't born for another 300 years," Frasier says. "The Renaissance really was a rebirth of the idea of the enjoyment of food. Everything on our menu at M.C. Spiedo really references that or is a direct rendition of actual dishes from the period."

An all-Italian wine list and cocktails made from Italian liqueurs reflect the theme, and the expedient service carries over to the lounge, where patrons can order a drink from the drink cart rather than waiting for a waitress or going to the bar.

With counter seating for nine along the open kitchen and four booths with tents overhead to provide some extra privacy in the dining room, there's an artistic flair to the space, which seats about 100 people.

"The look of the room is a very glam room. It has a very different feel than most dining rooms in the city," Frasier says. "It has a very see and be-seen kind of feel."

Q&A

CASE STUDY

Dancer Mikhail Baryshnikov shows off his acting chops in Man in a Case, adapted from two Anton Chekhov stories, at ArtsEmerson Feb. 25-March 2.

AS A DANCER, WHAT DRAWS YOU TO THEATER? I still occasionally go on stage and dance, but my energy right now [is] in the theater projects because I always loved theater.... I grew up watching a lot of Russian theater.... It's not that apart. It's something about body language. It's about honesty.

WHAT IS THE MOST CHALLENGING THING ABOUT ACTING FOR YOU? [Laughs.] It's always to be good, and deliver the right materials in the right way, and give it justice to the author of the piece...and what the director wants you to convey, and to have a team spirit.... You cannot just choose one.

DO YOUR TWO CHARACTERS FACE SIMILAR OBSTACLES? Yes. Well, they're both stories about love, about involvement, about finding themselves in a storm of emotions.... Both stories [are] about love and discovering the feeling. It's very different, and yet there are similarities. We're all falling in the same traps sometimes, and the heroes of those Chekhov stories are in the same way. And that's why, you know, stories written at the end of 19th century resonate right now like they were written two weeks ago.

IS THERE DANCING IN A FEW SCENES? A little bit, there's movement. You know, I wouldn't call it big dancing. There's an element of theatrical dance of course, but don't expect for me to dance!

YOU'VE BEEN A PERFORMER AND ALSO ON THE OTHER SIDE AS A DIRECTOR. DO YOU PREFER ONE TO THE OTHER? Well, my running of [the] center in New York, that's my full-time job. I'm artistic director and a board member, and here I'm an actor and producer of the project and co-producer in some instances. But I like to be involved in the other side of the coin, being involved in all creative aspects. Of course I'm not a director in this particular instance.... But I like to develop the projects from ground zero. / Sarah Hagman

A TASTE OF TATTE: The Brookline bakery has three Cambridge outposts—and an expanded brunch menu.

Good Eats: Brunch Munch

You can start mapping Kendall Square by locations of Tatte Bakery & Cafe, Tzurit Or's growing empire of Middle Eastern–influenced sweets shops that recently opened its third location in that neighborhood. The menu options are expanding, too, most notably to the griddle, where Or's team at the large Third Street cafe is turning out Greek-style pancakes for its weekend brunch service. The pancakes are particularly rich and moist, thanks to a helping of thick labne in the batter (as well as spooned on top), not to mention richly flavored with cinnamon, sesame and housemade pear preserves. / Elizabeth Bomze

Treasure Island Wines

Sicily is one of the most prolific wine-producing regions in the world, but until recently the vast majority of its wine was unclassified simple vino da tavola (table wine). A quality revolution during the past decade has elevated the image of the island's wines, the best of which are now beginning to appear more regularly on restaurant wine lists and at retail shops. These three blind-tasting champs all tend to have softer tannins and flavors that express a substantial measure of the island's considerable sunshine. / Sandy Block

CUSUMANO, NERO D'AVOLA, TERRE SICILIANE IGT, 2012 Nero is Sicily's most widely planted red and the closest it comes to the island's breakout varietal, but the problem is its quality and style can be all over the map. This family-owned producer makes one that is rich, ripe and chunky, with pruney, tobacco-like aromas and bold chocolate accents. It's more intense and powerful than your average nero on the market, with a darker fruit expression. It's delicious with barbecued meat. $15, Winestone, Chestnut Hill

COS CERASUOLO DI VITTORIA CLASSICO DOCG, 2010 Among the most irresistible Sicilian reds I've tasted, this is a medium-bodied blend of nero (60 percent) and frappato (40 percent), a rarely encountered but fashionable grape that is fresher and more cherry-like. With enticing aromas of violet, ripe-red berries and licorice, this is a silky, layered red that is Sicily's first wine to carry the prestigious DOCG designation. Versatile with food, it will complement charcuterie, grilled vegetables, risotto-based dishes or roasted herb-rubbed chicken. $34 Lower Falls Wine Newton

TASCANTE "GHIAIA NERA" NERELLO MASCALESE, SICILIA IGT, 2010 This is an underground red grape, native to the area around Sicily's Mount Etna, that is often used as a base for rosé. Reminiscent of the charms of pinot noir, the wine has a light red color, tart, juicy flavors, and strawberry, floral and herbal scents. Bright-tasting and elegant, it partners well with grilled fish. $22 Central Bottle Cambridge

THE REEL WINNERS

One thing you can always count on is that the Academy Awards will get everything wrong. This year, like so many others, the omissions were more notable than the nominations. In preparation for the March 2 ceremony, we've compiled a handy list of oversights. / Sean Burns

Best Performance by a Screen Legend Suffering Horribly While on a Boat Tom Hanks, Captain Phillips. I don't know what else a guy needs to do to get an Oscar nomination, but damn.

Second Best Performance by a Screen Legend Suffering Horribly While on a Boat Robert Redford, All Is Lost. See above.

Breast Supported Actress Amy Adams, American Hustle. The side-boob slideshow offered by her plunging necklines must've busted the budget on double-sided tape.

Most Acting Meryl Streep, August: Osage County. Special commendation for the tireless set-department workers who had to scrub her teethmarks off the scenery after every take.

Best Silly Character Name Idris Elba as Stacker Pentecost in Pacific Rim.

Worst Silly Character Name Will Smith as Cypher Raige in After Earth.

Most Marketing Anchorman 2: The Legend Continues. Not to say that Will Ferrell and company were ubiquitous this past December, but when Emerson College announced it was renaming one of its schools the Ron Burgundy School of Communication, the entire cast followed me into the bathroom of a Tremont Street bar and tried to sell me a Dodge Durango.

Least Amount of Suspense Wondering if there would be a lousy new Bono song in Mandela: Long Walk to Freedom.

Cleverest Post-Production Dubbing to Obtain a PG-13 Rating Lee Daniels' The Butler, for having somebody off screen drop a bin of silverware with a clattering crash every time Cuba Gooding Jr. said something filthy. That's one klutzy White House.

Most Awkward Post-Movie Conversation Having to explain what exactly Leonardo DiCaprio was doing with that cocaine in the beginning of The Wolf of Wall Street.

Worst Robert De Niro Impersonation Christian Bale, American Hustle. Runners up: Robert De Niro, Grudge Match; Robert De Niro, American Hustle.

Purveyors: Kraut That Rocks

The Berkshires-based Hosta Hill farm and lacto-fermented vegetable business is expanding, but the operation will continue to be a homegrown one—quite literally. Thanks to a Kickstarter campaign, the new workspace for Abe Hunrichs and Maddie Elling will be built in their basement. Published by Harper, 368 pages, $26 hardcover
The author lives in Western Massachusetts.

IN THIS DEBUT NOVEL SET IN 1897, THE WEATHER, cold and cruel, is almost like a character. Caleb, 12, comes home to discover his father and four siblings murdered. When his mother, Elspeth, arrives, he accidentally shoots (but doesn't kill) her. The book follows the tormented odyssey of this surviving "couple" as they attempt to find the murderers. Along the way, we learn that Elspeth, a midwife, had in fact kidnapped all her children, and hence wasn't their actual mother, nor a particularly loving one. That secret crime electrifies her self-flagellation, taking her on a kind of moral journey.

The two stay in a rural town where, disguised as a man, Elspeth works cutting ice on a giant lake. Caleb works in a brothel, where he both sees horrors and receives tenderness from a too-young prostitute. Eventually he finds his real family and, learning they have suffered monumentally since his disappearance as an infant, begins to distance himself from the plan for vengeance.

In their painful journey, son and mother form a belated bond, twisted with guilt, seeking revenge and, finally, redemption. Ironically, it's misery and danger that makes them related at last. Violence and wind blow through the book, and Scott's intense language echoes it.

FROM PAGE 233: The snow had melted and then frozen over in an icy sheen. The wind tightened his skin, made his cuts sing and his bruises throb. He waited for the barking of a dog, the bellowing of a calf to herald his presence, but the woods were silent. Ahead, the ridge curled toward the Shane household like the tail of a sleeping dog. ◆

GOLD RUSH

FIND HIGH-ALTITUDE THRILLS OFF THE SLOPES IN BRECKENRIDGE, COLO.

In the mid-1800s, Breckenridge, Colo., was accidentally forgotten on a United States map. Even though the mistake was rectified nearly 50 years later, the well-preserved Alpine town still feels like uncharted territory. Though it originally started as a gold-mining settlement, skiing is what truly put Breckenridge back on the map. But if you're hesitant to hop on a pair of skis, there are still plenty of outdoor adventures that allow you to carve up the Rockies. And no matter which activity you choose, you'll likely strike gold.

About an hour and a half outside of Denver, Breckenridge has a population of around 4,000 that hikes to 40,000 when flurries start flying. Most of the dining and shopping options are located on Main Street, which is lined with Victorian gingerbread house-style facades, strands of holiday lights and snowbanks that sheen like polished metal. Since the street's Christmas tree stays up year-round, this downtown strip feels like Whoville without the Grinch. To fuel up for the next morning's backcountry sports, head to dinner at the Warming Hut, where comfort food and fuel collide in dishes like elk medallions and bison chili. Located in a historic late-1800s home, it has a drink menu that preserves Colorado's suds legacy, by only serving microbrews made in the state.

A snowball's throw from Main Street lies Mountain Thunder Lodge. Though the exteriors resemble a log-cabin mansion, framed by snowcapped pines right out of a Christmas village diorama, the lodge's interiors pleasantly cater to those who only want to immerse themselves in nature during the daytime. Multi-bedroom condos are outfitted with plasma TVs, Starbucks products, gas fireplaces and mountain-facing windows—making them the perfect luxury boxes for viewing skiers, snowboarders and snowshoers.

Now that you're well-fed and rested, it's time to operate some heavy machinery. White Mountain Tours offers a snowmobiling and zip-lining package that tests confidence levels from some 12,500 feet up. The morning begins with a snowmobiling trek around Chalk Mountain and the Continental Divide, filled with ups, downs and powdery, unpaved trails. Guides explain the techniques for driving winter's motorcycle to participants of all experience levels, but if you're too uncoordinated to even navigate your way to the practice area (i.e., me), the guides will happily let you hitch a ride with them. The route, filled with sharp turns and massive animal tracks, leads snowmobilers to the "Top of the World," where the line between sky and snow blurs, giving you the feeling of floating in a cloud—until a natural speed bump bounces you in your seat and brings you back to earth.

After navigating your snowmobile through the heavily wooded paths, zip lining almost seems relaxing, since the only skill it requires is a tight grip. Five zip-lining stations, most being dual lines, wind their way around a property that contains more than 25 abandoned gold mines and boasts plenty of pure snow. But revving up your heart rate is as easy as looking down, especially at the "Leap of Faith" station, which requires a quick drop off the wooden platform and leaves your Sorels soaring just above the treetops.

For those who feel more comfortable in a pack, the Siberian huskies at Good Times Adventures are always willing to go for a ride. You can dogsled through the tree-lined paths of Swan River Valley, with eight canines who take their roles as chauffeurs very seriously, until they flip on their backs and ask for a belly rub. Though steering and braking are the sleigh driver's responsibility, a guide leads the pack with a snowmobile to help motivate the mushers. Besides the occasional bark, it's likely the closest experience to riding in Santa's sleigh. The huskies don't expect presents for their hard work at the end of the six-mile run, but they do require gratuity in the form of petting.

If drinking is your preferred sport, Breckenridge offers options to keep you warm during a single-digit day. The Breckenridge Brewery & Pub, located toward the end of Main Street, brews most of the craft beer it serves on site, with options such as an agave-nectar-infused wheat ale and a stout with notes of oatmeal, chocolate and coffee. Along with producing more than 1,000 barrels a year, they also offer a hefty lunch, dinner and late-night menu with cheers-worthy options like buffalo chicken beer cheese soup, made with the brewery's own IPA. Those looking for black-diamond-level liquid courage should head to the Breckenridge Distillery, the highest elevated distillery in the world, for a tour and tasting of its award-winning bourbon whiskey, vodka and bitters. The factory resembles what Willy Wonka would have designed if he preferred alcohol over Everlasting Gobstoppers. Even the shape and color of the main room's copper still resembles an Oompa Loompa, and a sugary smell permeates from the open-top fermenters. After sampling their sweet corn-based vodka, three-year barrel-aged bourbon and sippable, syrupy bitters, ask for a shot of their "Dude, Sweet" dark-chocolate sauce mixed with bourbon and agave. Even though tasters won't turn into a giant blueberry, they might still have to be rolled out of the factory.

The pioneering days of the gold rush may be over, but there are still plenty of treasures left in Colorado. ◆

KENDALL SQUARE'S COMMONWEALTH GOES BACK TO BASICS.

COMMONWEALTH
11 Broad Canal Way, Cambridge (617-945-7030)
commonwealthcambridge.com

A FUNNY THING HAPPENED ON THE WAY from farm to table. All over the Boston area—and all over the country, for that matter—the rustic, heirloom, freshly picked ingredients espoused by chefs and food fanatics... well, they got fancy. The farm eggs bubbled in a sous-vide bath; the heritage pork became an aspic-glazed terrine. Even humble greens became frightfully composed salads.

Thankfully, along came Steve "Nookie" Postal. The chef/owner of Commonwealth, a restaurant-market hybrid that opened in Kendall Square in November, has long advocated using local ingredients. (He even sourced locally while working as executive chef at Fenway Park.) But Postal also has a passion for cooking people-pleasing, unfussy fare: "I'm not a formal guy," he explains. "My favorite meal is a perfectly roast chicken, potatoes roasted in the chicken fat, and broccoli."

The result is a highly edited menu that changes day to day and week to week depending on his purveyors' offerings. Stripped-down preparations—"no foams, no crazy sauces, no molecular techniques"—mean flavors come through with remarkable clarity. A salad of farm greens, radishes, heirloom carrots and pomegranate seeds ($10) is barely dressed, but each forkful yields intense texture and flavor. Baby spinach leaves in a salad with Honeycrisp apples and candied pecans ($10) are so tender and fresh they're almost plump, and the crumbly granules of aged, clothbound cheddar lend salty richness to the plate.

Grilled squid paired with strips of soft, salty La Quercia prosciutto ($10) offers a similar pleasure, with smoky charred flavor and bits of pickled pears on the plate. Postal's clam chowder ($10), topped with steamed littlenecks in the shell, is a contender for the title of best in town. With hunks of bacon and potato, it's creamy but not overly thick, and topped with tiny snipped chives. The promised "Commonwealth crackers" may have been missing when the chowder arrived on our table on a recent visit, but it was hard to care.

Scattered service was a fail point on multiple occasions. One visit, our cocktails didn't appear until well after the first course. Sometimes we were greeted with warm pull-apart bread and butter; sometimes it only showed when we asked

(and with no butter). At our second dinner, our server explained that all of the dishes, including the proteins, are served family style and meant to be shared. Wait, what? That explains why our previous night's meal included enough meat to feed a pride of lions.

Still, you probably won't regret overordering—you'll just overeat. Venison steak ($24) is presented more like a loin: thick medallions with a deep pink center, a superb crust and just a pleasant hint of game flavor. A long flap of Pineland Farm skirt steak ($23) is tender, with an excellent charred crust; it's great when dipped into the classic steak sauce. The short rib ($26), also from Pineland Farm, is a straightforward Flintstones-style hunk of meat that pulls cleanly off the bone; it's perfect with sides of sauteed black kale and cheesy polenta ($9 each). (I didn't think any Boston chef could pack more richness into polenta than Barbara Lynch, but Postal's is absurd.) Ask nicely and they'll do a half portion of the sides, which is a good way to sample more of the offerings, like duck-fat fries or an iron skillet of intensely earthy foraged mushrooms.

For desserts, there are no gelees or quenelles, no fruit in powder form. Instead, there's an ice cream program: Pick your house-made base flavor ($5), like a boozy chocolate-bourbon or an aromatic cinnamon-honey, and then, with the glee of kid at a soft-serve bar, add fixings like a warm apple beignet, fudgy brownie or banana-chocolate chip bread pudding ($3). Sauces ($2) include cocoa-nib "magic shell" and homemade marshmallow fluff, which comes torched brulee-style.

Of course, if a multi-course dinner isn't in order, Commonwealth's bar bustles with folks sitting down for just a cocktail—the list ranges from classics like Gibsons and Collinses to tongue-in-cheek choices like the Appletini and Pina Colada—and a few local oysters off the raw bar. The decor sets a warm, casual tone for nights like these, with accent walls covered in brick and upcycled wood shipping pallets. The mood is unfailingly jovial, and many patrons pop over to the adjoining market to grab snacks and items like house-made Sriracha pasta, marinara sauce and seasonal produce to cook at home. (Occasionally, the cooks pop over to grab an extra onion too.) The vibe is friendly. Unstuffy. And, most important, the ingredients get their due. ◆

Q: MY SKIN IS SO DRY RIGHT NOW; WHAT'S THE BEST TREATMENT TO HYDRATE AND "PLUMP UP" MY SKIN?

A: Hydrasonic skin therapy is my favorite winter treatment. This is a high-tech treatment that gently exfoliates, hydrates and nourishes your skin using sophisticated ultrasound technology.

The gentle ultrasonic sound wave action, coupled with water, causes pores to open up and allows the cells to absorb the water as it is applied. In addition, multiple serums, such as hyaluronic acid, peptides, green tea antioxidants, and enzymes are layered on during the treatment. The serums nourish and protect your skin, making it more resilient to the perils of winter.

This pampering treatment is very relaxing, but, even better, your skin becomes deeply hydrated and feels soft and healthy.

THE MONUMENTS MEN* ★★
Starring George Clooney, Matt Damon, Cate Blanchett, Bill Murray, John Goodman, Jean Dujardin and Bob Balaban. Based on the book by Robert M. Edsel and Bret Witter. Screenplay by Grant Heslov and George Clooney. Directed by George Clooney.

MEN IN UNIFORM

THE MONUMENTS MEN, DIRECTED BY GEORGE CLOONEY, ALREADY SEEMS ANTIQUATED.

Even as a young man, George Clooney was a throwback. He's one of those guys who didn't get famous until he hit middle age for a reason. Your dad's movie star, he's a dapper, classy gentleman who seems to have a saner handle on celebrity than most. It's also incredibly annoying that Clooney is only getting more handsome and becoming a better actor as he gets older.

His directorial work is far more curious, but not in a good way. Wedded inextricably to bygone traditions, Clooney burst out of the gate with the barely seen, phantasmagoric adaptation of The Gong Show host Chuck Barris' phony autobiography, Confessions of a Dangerous Mind. The psychosexual post-modern perversions of Charlie Kaufman's screenplay were complemented by the old-school 1960s live-TV gimmicks Clooney employed behind the camera, and it's still one of the looniest debuts I have ever seen.

But Confessions was a massive flop, and since then Clooney has retreated further and further into the past with significantly starchier source material. Good Night, and Good Luck was smart but a bit stodgy. Leatherheads and The Ides of March were just plain stodgy. This brings us to The Monuments Men, a seemingly can't-miss movie with a killer cast that was unceremoniously bumped from last year's Oscar season to the doldrums of February at the last minute. But if they were ever really serious about this thing winning Academy Awards, they would have pushed it back to 1964.

Harkening back to so many WWII men-on-a-mission movies that Lee Marvin and John Sturges should probably get screen credits just on general principle, The Monuments Men finds Clooney leading a band of aging misfits in the waning days of World War II, attempting to rescue priceless works of art before Hitler's final orders torch them all.

But if they were ever really serious about this thing winning Academy Awards, they would have pushed it back to 1964.

Chasing after statues and paintings might seem like a foolish errand in light of the Holocaust, so Clooney tackles that question head-on. Well actually, he just stands around giving speeches about how important this mission is for world culture while the patriotic music blares and a game cast nods in awed agreement. Clooney does this more than once. In fact, he does it so many times the film seems to have developed an inferiority complex about its own purpose before it has even started.

What a cast, though! Matt Damon, John Goodman, Bob Balaban, Jean Dujardin and Bill Murray are all rounded up briefly for a quick tease of camaraderie and then sent on their separate ways to different parts of the globe chasing disconnected subplots that never come together. It's like Clooney didn't understand the appeal of his own Danny Ocean capers.

In one country you've got stuffy Damon being wowed by Cate Blanchett, and somewhere else Goodman is pretending to tolerate Dujardin. Clooney drives the Jeep and makes even more noble pronouncements, while way off in the very far corner of the movie Murray and Balaban are on their own in a bizarre buddy comedy I would much rather be watching.

The screenplay, penned by Clooney and his regular writing partner Grant Heslov, is a mishmash of ill-fitting parts, and the tone veers all over the place. The Monuments Men is a breezy lark until it isn't anymore, but then it is again. A syrupy montage set to "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas" bumps uncomfortably against even more reminders of the Holocaust. All these characters spend an awful lot of time trumpeting their brotherhood and sacrificing themselves for one another, which feels really weird considering how most of them have barely shared more than a few minutes together on screen.

Despite running more than two hours, the film feels like it's missing at least 40 minutes, with years passed over by Clooney's stopgap afterthought of a narration. The only real connective tissue is Alexandre Desplat's rousing retro score, which like all great World War II movie music contains a fair amount of whistling.

This is certainly a fascinating footnote to history, but, as presented by Clooney and Heslov, the story has no locomotive. Everybody kind of just stumbles upon hidden treasures in their own little disjointed story arcs, and then they all meet up later with a shrug. Oh, by the way, the war ended.

Clooney's lugubrious direction mimics the worst of those star-studded early-1960s epics, with lots of long dissolves and chunky inertia. The Monuments Men is indeed a throwback, but in this case that's not a compliment. ◆

STYLISH GAME

YOUNG SINGER/GUITARIST SPINS CINEMATIC MYSTERY FROM VINTAGE R&B GROOVES.

THE 1974 THRILLER CHINATOWN, A FILM-noir homage set in 1930s Los Angeles, proved as influential to Nick Waterhouse as any music when he was a teenager. "The thing about those stories, for me, was about the atmosphere," says Waterhouse, now 28, who also gravitated to French New Wave cinema and the detective fiction of Raymond Chandler. "It wasn't about who killed the girl. It was about what killed the girl."

You can sense that atmosphere in Waterhouse's second album, Holly, dedicated to Chinatown screenwriter Robert Towne. Out March 4, it's a sort of musical novella that reflects Waterhouse's own L.A. environs. "Holly's like a Madame Bovary of Echo Park," the singer/guitarist says of his mysterious protagonist. In turn, he taps cinematic minimalism from early R&B, jazz and blues influences rather than the snappy soul that anchors the Dap-Kings, Fitz & the Tantrums and Mayer Hawthorne.

"I don't really understand the whole retro-soul thing," says Waterhouse, who acknowledges that people have mistaken him for fellow L.A. denizen Hawthorne. "I guess we both just have baby faces and wear glasses. But again, it's the details. I like to think I have a little less H&M in my wardrobe and a little more Brooks Brothers."

The Huntington Beach native plucked his musical trappings not so much from Orange County, where he played on the psych-garage scene with Ty Segall, but from San Francisco, where he studied literature in college and became a DJ. He broadened his tastes during an apprenticeship at Rooky Ricardo's, a vinyl-record shop where he worked amid collectors of vintage soul and blues, girl groups and garage rock, experiencing the equivalent of a literary salon. "You don't get the community feel as much [today]," he says, lamenting the downside of the Internet age. "You just get this kind of data dump."

In turn, many people display a one-dimensional view of soul and R&B, Waterhouse says. "It's funny how many reviews I've heard say, 'This guy's doing like a Motown thing,' and to a guy who listens to Arcade Fire, I'm sure it sounds like Motown. But there's a rich series of tributaries in mid-century music on 45s."

For his part, Waterhouse emulated R&B guitarists like Lowman Pauling of the 5 Royales as well as primal blues players to hone his spectral twang and clipped rhythms. "It's like the Steve Cropper feel, where six notes communicate a lot more than a Stevie Ray Vaughan lead," he says. "It's putting the groove of the song above all else, even your lead playing, or feeling like you're skating on top of it. A lot of surf [rockers] play like that, but I'm equally influenced by Otis Rush or Ike Turner."

"It's funny how many reviews I've heard say, 'This guy's doing like a Motown thing,' and to a guy who listens to Arcade Fire, I'm sure it sounds like Motown."

As for vocal influences, Waterhouse acknowledges Van Morrison, Ray Charles and Mose Allison, even covering Allison's "Let It Come Down" on Holly. "[Mose] existed in this sweet spot of intellect and earthiness and blues and jazz and some American folk sensibilities," he says.

"I was always a reluctant singer," adds Waterhouse, who favors cool, emotive intonation over striving for high notes. "That was something else that Mose made me feel OK about. At the time I discovered him, I was listening to so many heavy black voices that were really just outstanding, and I was feeling bad that I had a very limited range. He helped me re-evaluate."

Waterhouse compensates with style, feel and attitude, surging in the new album's jumpy advance single "This Is a Game," which rocks with brawny sax pumps and a Doors-y keyboard break.

He likes to get his band "to where it feels airtight and then let it relax like 10 percent," Waterhouse says, and he plans to bring a seven-piece combo including backup singers to the Brighton Music Hall on Feb. 25.

Waterhouse recalls his 2012 Boston debut at nearby Great Scott, saying, "People were wild, man." But don't expect a scene as wild as the noir-ish video for "This Is a Game," where the singer/guitarist gets rolled by thugs outside the club for coming on to a kingpin's girlfriend. As Waterhouse says, "We can't get beaten up and kiss people every night." ◆

The Dance / John D. Spooner

ON THE ROAD: NEW YORK

A TRIP TO AN ECHO CHAMBER FOR AMERICAN ANXIETIES—AND HOPES.

I WAS IN MANHATTAN RECENTLY AND THOUGHT, "I could double my income if I lived here." Everyone I observed over four days was hustling to make a deal—to get a kid into the preschool, to be elected or re-elected, to diss their neighbor, to get the best table, to raise the money, to sculpt the abs, to keep the pensions, to hammer the opponents. To put bread on the table. To stay alive.

You say, "Yup. Same as everywhere else in the world." Right. But in New York, nothing is masked. The Dance is not formalized. It's basically the "Dirty Boogie," every citizen for themselves, dancing faster than anywhere else.

My first business appointment, on my first morning in the city, was in a tall building on the West Side, off Broadway. After the obligatory security check, I was standing at the elevator bank when the two uniformed guards, one man, one woman, started screaming at each other. "I'll show you respect when you show me respect."

"I'll show you respect when you deserve it!" All this at a high decibel, with dozens of people near them, averting their gaze, not wanting to make eye contact. "Every day's an adventure," a woman said to me. "Most of the people pissed off, most of the time."

In the 1970s, crime was a real problem in New York. With Bill de Blasio coming in as the new mayor, I heard lots of conversation about backsliding into this era. "We'll see the squeegee men back in force," I heard. One man told me, "Back then I got mugged while I was staring up at the Plaza Hotel, remembering that I was married there. This is what tourists do, and I got caught acting like one, an easy mark. 'Keep walking fast' was the rule then. And I'm afraid we're going to go back to that. I had friends who went out carrying squash rackets to deter dangerous characters."

There's been a lot of rhetoric in the media recently about the income disparity in America, the haves and the have-nots. Quite a few people in New York talked to me about this, and not in a dismissive way. "After Hurricane Emily," a money manager told me, "I waited in line for an hour to get gas one day, and I saw at least two serious fights between people waiting in line. It was getting ugly, and scary, too." The man, now in his middle 40s, had grown up poor in a big family and worked his young tail off to get his slice of the dream. He told me that he hated to see publicity about apartments in Brooklyn that get snapped up in a day for over $2 million. "I'm afraid that if things get bad enough in the job markets, people are going to pour into the streets. Like in Egypt. Or Syria."

And I thought I was down there for catching up with friends and some great theater and dining. Not gearing up for the revolution. Everything is exacerbated in Manhattan, the highs higher, the lows lower. But at the dawn of 2014, the natives were definitely restless.

At dinner with a lawyer and his wife, lifelong New Yorkers I've known for more than 30 years, he said, "I'm a Democrat. Always. And I'm on several nonprofit boards. But this new class-war rhetoric makes me think for the first time that maybe it's time to head for the mountains of Busch. Or at least out of this city. Do I have to feel guilty for having busted my tail to achieve something, to have my family benefit from what I've created? I hate the idea of Florida, or Texas, or the other tax-free states. But this is America, and I dreamed the dream. Maybe it's time to move west."

I heard a lot of anger during this trip, from up and down the economic scale, anger boiling up the scale and anger pointed down.

But we are still an aspirational society in America. Recent immigrants I talked with in Boston universally want the good life for themselves and their children. Many of them—here from Brazil and Bulgaria, Ethiopia and Algeria, Cambodia and Vietnam—are working several jobs at once, and they're convinced they can do it. "That's why we came here," a young man from Algiers told me. "So my girls can be American."

I heard a lot of anger during this trip, from up and down the economic scale.

And the bright lights of the Big Apple remain a beacon for many. Broadway still shines with shows like Kinky Boots and Wicked, and you can wander the great Frick Museum and the constant surprises at the Brooklyn Museum. Have a planter's punch and a burger at P.J. Clarke's on Third Avenue, or taste the originality of any of the Blue Ribbon restaurants. They are model of how smart owners, in this case the Bromberg brothers, can build a brand.

On this trip I tried something I had made a bet about. I told a friend, "How about we get in a cab and put blindfolds on? And we tell the driver, 'Drive around for 20 minutes in any direction and drop us off.'" I bet my friend that wherever we were dropped, we could find a restaurant within a block that's memorable. We drove around. The driver stopped on the West Side, right next to a market. Above it was a delight of a restaurant, the Fairway Cafe, the kind of place tourists never really go, where you can taste the neighborhood's sights and smells, and watch the locals, who, if pressed, wouldn't live anywhere else in the world. ◆

HIGH RELIEF

MY FULLY LUCID ACCOUNT OF A MEDIBLE EXPERIMENT.

Good old Puritan Massachusetts was not the first state to embrace medical marijuana, but neither will it be last. By next summer there will likely be two functioning dispensaries in Boston, which is exciting news for not only people with treatable conditions but those who plan to develop a treatable condition by, say, next summer. If your idea of a good time is watching someone make a salad while wondering how long you've been watching someone make a salad, then you're about to hit the jackpot. Pun intended, man.

That salad thing is not a hypothetical situation, by the way. In the name of journalism, some months ago I procured a sample dose of medical marijuana. An "edible," in the new reefer parlance, it looked like a square of gummy fruit sealed in a foil wrapper. A Californian friend of mine gave it to me, advising me to eat half of it and then wait 20 minutes. The instructions on the packet were even more conservative, indicating a quarter-square at first. As it turns out, even less than that would probably suffice for anybody other than Wiz Khalifa.

The night he gave me the gummy weed, my prescription-toting friend and another buddy each ate an entire dose, allowing me to observe the effects of medical marijuana from a non-high perspective. Whatever the clinical indications, the main outcome seemed to be a heightened appreciation for my hilarious conversational patter. I should mention that these are two highly accomplished professionals, and we were in the kind of restaurant that's so froufrou it initially turned me away for wearing shorts. Thus I had to borrow a pair of pants that were several inches too short, making me look like a Pee-wee Herman impersonator. Realistically, my dinner companions might've done a lot of laughing even without the THC.

I had to drive home that night, so I pocketed my gummy weed for ingestion at a later date. Several months passed, as I was legitimately afraid of my scientifically enhanced super-bud. This wasn't some bag of stems sold by a guy named Barf. This was a powerful drug, tested and refined and produced in a factory, possibly by a guy named Barf. Medical marijuana is just like any other bigpharma product, if Pfizer made drugs with names like Big Buddha Cheese and Dankey Doodle.

A NEED FOR WEED: Medical marijuana dispensaries will be up and running soon.

Finally, one night at a dinner party, I divvy up the gummy with three other interested parties, and we gingerly dip our toes in the brave new world of medical marijuana.

For the first 20 minutes or so, I wonder if maybe I got a defective batch. I feel fine. Delayed effects, though, are characteristic of edibles, which is why they warn you to wait a half-hour before wolfing down a whole plate of funky brownies. Sure enough, as the magic half-hour approaches, time distends and my habitually short attention span gives way to extended contemplation of normally mundane items: salad, salad dressing, my hand holding a fork as it plunges into a bowl of salad in super slow-mo. The other three test subjects appear unaffected, leading me to conclude that I am the only person dwelling on my own unique salad-centric time-space continuum.

The usual weed thoughts tap-dance across my consciousness: Nobody else feels like this. Everybody knows that I feel like this, and they're looking at me. I must try super-hard to act normal. But not too hard, because then everyone will know—wait, they already do, right? Everything is absurd and I want to laugh, but that would really be a giveaway.

I'm already inclined to eat Cool Ranch Doritos and laugh at dumb things, so why exaggerate those traits while adding a layer of lethargy and paranoia?

I step outside to collect myself. One of my fellow gummy partakers follows me out and confides, "I feel like I just did five bong hits." Further consultation reveals that all four of us are better suited to a marathon Dark Side of the Moon listening sesh than we are to normal human interaction. I have an uncontrollable laughing fit. Nearby, people are lighting off fireworks, and we watch that. They're good fireworks!

President Obama recently said that he thinks marijuana is more benign than alcohol, and he's probably right. But my quarter-dose of the medical chronic confirms that I'm just not a weed guy. I'm already inclined to eat Cool Ranch Doritos and laugh at dumb things, so why exaggerate those traits while adding a layer of lethargy and paranoia? I suppose there's something to be said for getting baked and contemplating the origin of the universe, but for my intoxication dollar I'd rather play flip-cup and scream at people.

But if you want to become a regular at your local dispensary, have at it. We need the tax money. Just remember that when you're riding the T and feeling the effects of that Louisiana Swamp Moss, everyone is looking at you. And man, they know. ◆

Soroff On / Jenny Johnson

AN OPEN PLAYBOOK

THE TV HOST AND PRODUCER DISHES ON SPORTS, PIG ROASTS AND INDUSTRY SECRETS.

EMMY AWARD-WINNING TELEVISION PRODUCER Jenny Johnson, 31, recently launched a new food and sports show, Dining Playbook, on NESN, co-hosting with Billy Costa. For eight years, Johnson and Costa co-hosted NECN's TV Diner, for which she also served as executive producer. A Marblehead native, she's an honors graduate of the University of New Hampshire and spent a summer after graduation volunteering at an orphanage in Cape Town, South Africa. Her extensive charitable involvement includes riding in the Pan-Mass Challenge and hosting Dana-Farber's annual gala. She worked as an entertainment and news reporter before finding her niche as New England's most telegenic foodie. She lives in Back Bay.

JONATHAN SOROFF: Which is easier—being in front of the camera or producing?
JENNY JOHNSON: Being in front of the camera. What you see is what you get. The person on TV is similar to the person you'd be sitting at dinner with. Behind the camera, there's so much to orchestrate, so many different people and elements to juggle, the writing...it's so much more complicated.

Most obnoxious celebrity chef? Well, I'm not a Gordon Ramsay fan. He's just so not my style. I have so much respect for the restaurant business. Of course, there's going to be yelling. Chefs yell. I'm a producer. I yell. But he takes it to this level I can't relate to at all.

Here's what everybody wants to know: How do you stay so damn skinny? [Laughs] My answer used to be, "Wait till I'm 30." Now, I'm 31, and apparently, it's still working. I honestly have a voracious appetite. My sister always says that it's not humanly possible to consume what I do. But I will say that in the past two years, I've become more conscious of what I'm eating.... The short answer is: Look at my mother. She and I have the same body, and she's 62 years old. I'm very lucky.

Anything you'd never eat? There's nothing. I will at least try anything. I won't necessarily like it. But that's part of my job. I was just in Thailand eating roasted grasshoppers.

What's the grossest thing you ever ate? I was in Puerto Rico, high up on a mountaintop at a place called La Ranchera. There was a pig roast, and I'd just spent a solid hour taking an axe to the pig, which was one of the more exhilarating moments ever and kind of disturbing at the same time. Anyway, I think it was a relleno, wrapped in a plantain skin, and it was one of the few times on camera when I took a bite of something and you could tell I could barely swallow it.

Go-to date restaurant? That would presuppose that I go on dates, which is something I'm really working on for 2014.

Food that you were shocked you fell in love with? This is so cliche, because it's now on every menu, but I'm in love with Brussels sprouts. If I could cuddle with them, I would. If I need to feel comfy, I make Brussels sprouts—and if you'd said that to me as a kid, I would have stared at you.

"I'm in love with Brussels sprouts. If I could cuddle with them, I would."

How often do you cook at home? No more than once a week. Sunday, I usually make a kitcheree [mung beans and rice]. It's very easy to digest. It's super flavorful. I can get a lot of veggies in there. I love Indian spices and the rich, layered flavors. And you can make an enormous pot of it, and you have it for the week.

Most expensive thing you ever ate? It was actually something I drank. A Châteauneuf-du-Pape at Cru on Nantucket. I don't remember the maker or year, but there was definitely sticker shock.

Is it the reporting part or the food part that's your passion? Neither. It's the people. I love both of those things, but the restaurant business is one of the hardest things to succeed in, and I'm fascinated by who these people are, how they got here, how they do what they do, how they deal with every menu change, every person, every Yelp review. To me, it's the person behind it, making it happen, that's so important.

So do you consider yourself a journalist, a producer, a TV personality? People ask me that, and I used to ask myself the same thing. What am I? Who do I want to be? Do I want to be in NY or LA? It wasn't until recently that I realized I am exactly where I want to be. I love Boston. My dream is to be doing what I'm doing now.

Who's your go-to designer? It's kind of hilarious that somehow people think I'm fashionable. I'm so not. But I have a sister who is one of the most fashionable human beings you'll ever meet, and she tells me what to wear. Thank God.

How big a sports fan are you? I'm getting there. I promise. My little brother could tell you the neck size of every guy in the NFL, every statistic of every baseball player who's ever lived. When he found out I was doing a show on NESN, he was like, "You're the girl who's gonna say, 'Nice goal!' when they score a basket." I'm embracing that. NESN's embracing that. There's a place for that. And I'm learning. I'm excited to get to know these people who are masters at what they do.

Tell me a secret about Billy Costa. Ugh, God. [Laughs] He likes to have Evian sprayed on his face before they put on his makeup.

What do you think is the best-kept secret in the restaurant industry? That while they're in competition with each other, the restaurateurs and chefs genuinely like each other.

Is it annoying that every one of your friends asks you for restaurant recommendations or to get them reservations somewhere? It's more that they ask me, and I could just give an answer, but I feel compelled to say, "Well, are you in the mood for Italian? Would you like a romantic restaurant? Do you like fine dining? What's your price point?" I have to ask 17 questions to give an answer. But I love it when people ask me. If I can't do that, then there's no point to this. ◆

CATCH 'EM IF YOU CAN

There may be plenty of fish in the sea, but unfortunately, a lot of them are bottom feeders.

That's where we come in. As a valentine to you, every year we assemble a list of the city's most accomplished, interesting and alluring bachelors and bachelorettes. Each of our 20 singles is exceptional in one way or another. And all of them are what your friends would call "a great catch."

They lead full and fascinating lives, which may explain why they haven't settled down yet, but also proves that being footloose and fancy-free is just fine.

So without further preamble, we're proud to present Boston's Most Eligible Singles, Class of 2014.

Defender for the Boston Breakers

A natural athlete with a superior intellect, this Missouri native has little time to kick back, but she makes it all look easy. After earning a bachelor's degree from Auburn University, where she played soccer, she came to Boston to play professionally in the National Women's Soccer League for the Boston Breakers. Last season, she returned to Auburn to play basketball—no small feat after five years away from the sport—and pursue a master's degree in adult education, but now she's back in Boston, once again playing for the Breakers and continuing her graduate studies from a distance. Independent and adventurous, she's found that the constant traveling for sports has left her with a lingering wanderlust: After the season ends, she loves to take a trip someplace where she can put her feet up for a while. (And when her feet are up, it's impossible not to notice her flawless legs.) A die-hard Cardinals fan, she's developed a love for the Red Sox (last year's World Series was rough on her). She's also been developing her culinary skills, frequently experimenting with new recipes. An added bonus: Her sweet tooth means you'll always have someone to share dessert with.

Matthew GRACE, 31

Co-founder and CTO of Objective Logistics

A computer savant from an early age, he grew up in Dartmouth as part of a large Cape Verdean clan and taught himself to program at the age of 13, borrowing books from the Southworth Library. Soon he went from punting fellow teens off AOL to developing software that helped him pay his way through computer-science studies at UMass Dartmouth. After a stint at State Street, he joined the elite team at ClickSoftware, building A.I. applications for huge corporations (you can thank him for the algorithm behind that dreaded customer service "appointment window" of 12 to 4 pm). From there, he became director of product management at Oracle, traveling to 37 states and countries all over the world. He then returned to Massachusetts and teamed up with his best friend to found Objective Logistics, whose software allows restaurants and retailers to gamify staff performance. The startup now has 20 employees and counting. He's also a co-founder of Rekindle, a still-in-stealth-mode app that aims to help users reconnect with old flames. Actively involved with the tech charity TUGG, he's an avid snowboarder and recently started training in Muay Thai. For fun, he works on mathematical proofs, cooks, reads and plays guitar. Imagine a young Bill Gates in the making...only good-looking and cool.

Jenni VINGI, 28

VIP and guest relations manager at Revere Hotel

The product of a tight-knit Sicilian family—with a dozen great-aunts and great-uncles within hollering distance—this Rhode Island-born beauty honed her people skills early. They come in handy in her role at the hotel, where she's looked after such high-profile guests as John Travolta and Andy Garcia but aims to ensure every guest feels like a VIP. Passionate about dance, she studied tap, jazz and ballet for 16 years and just broke in a new pair of pointe shoes. If pressed, she'll admit to winning the title of Miss Rhode Island International, though her fiercely independent spirit bristles at the thought of conforming to others' ideas of beauty or accomplishment. Skilled at sewing and a champion bedazzler, she loves crafts and once built a doghouse in three days. (Her three canines are the apples of her eye.) Currently focused on her career, she has little free time—a hotel never takes a day off—but she is chipping away at her "30 things to do before I'm 30" list, which includes entries such as "ride something bigger than a horse," "watch the sunrise from California" and our personal favorite: "punch fear in the face."

Michelle CALDEIRA, 38

Director of development at College Bound Dorchester

This South American import lived in Guyana until she was 12, then moved to Brooklyn—quite an adjustment. ("Imagine arriving at JFK in February when all you've known is 80-plus-degree weather.") After studying sociology at Binghamton University, she moved back to the city for a stint in corporate marketing but soon decided she preferred the nonprofit world. She worked at a hunger-oriented charity in the Bronx before moving to Boston in 2002. Since then, she's raised more than $12 million for the Pine Street Inn, the Dimock Center, the Renaissance Charter School and her current employer, College Bound Dorchester. Passionate, giving and (on most days) idealistic, she's a political junkie, a fashion plate and a bookworm. Though she says she's no athlete, she recently surprised herself by crossing "running a marathon" off her bucket list, and her ideal date involves "something active and playful," like pool, bowling or kart racing. She's also a serious sports fan, one who can even be forgiven for her Yankees allegiance, because going to a game at Fenway is one of her favorite things in the world.

Rich DOWNING, 30

Fitness entrepreneur

A product of the western exurbs, this handsome go-getter graduated from Colby College and, after a stint in a cubicle farm "right out of the movie Office Space," earned his master's from the University of Virginia Darden School of Business, where his entrepreneurial streak was awakened. He and a friend founded a mobile payment startup called PhoneTab that ultimately failed, but during this grueling time he found stress relief as an indoor-cycling instructor. An avid athlete, he ran track and cross-country in college and was a triathlete before being waylaid by rheumatoid arthritis, a setback that led him to indoor cycling. He hasn't looked back since. Currently a group-cycle instructor at Flywheel Sports in Back Bay, he's launching his own fitness studio, Turnstyle, in Kendall Square later this year. Collaborative, imaginative, outgoing and driven, he's also advised several startups and co-founded the nonprofit Neutral Development Project, which raised money for Water.org over four years. Plus, he won the "Mr. Colby" pageant in college, and with looks like that, it's easy to see why.

Jordan CARON, 23

Right wing for the Boston Bruins

Blissfully free of the gargantuan ego that plagues many pro athletes, the Bruins' baby-faced No. 38 is as modest and down-to-earth as they come. A native of Sayabec, Quebec, a small town 30 minutes outside the not-much-larger town of Rimouski, he's quiet and serious on the ice but has an excellent sense of humor, plus piercing blue eyes that don't seem to miss a trick. Used to cold northern climes, he spends his free time holed up with a book or watching movies, instead of tossing Benjamins around at a club. After hockey, tennis is his favorite sport, and he avidly follows the big tournaments. He enjoys doing charity work through the team, visiting hospitals and schools, and he considers it an honor to be able to help people who are having a hard time. He also considers it an honor to play in the NHL—a refreshing attitude in someone so talented. He earns bonus points for speaking fluent French and being handy in the kitchen, and while he usually only cooks for himself, we suspect he'd have any girl eating out of his hand.

Christina FRANGOS, 28

Corporate attorney at Mintz Levin

A Renaissance woman if ever there was one, this violin-playing, scuba-diving, civically active corporate lawyer never ceases to surprise. An area native, she has a bachelor's degree from Rice University's Shepherd School of Music and a law degree from Boston University. As a corporate attorney, she handles matters like venture capital, public securities offerings, mergers and acquisitions, SEC compliance, corporate governance and contract negotiation, working with clients that range from cutting-edge startups to large bio-tech companies to nonprofits. To keep her hand in the musical world, she serves as an overseer of the Handel and Haydn Society and a board member of the Longwood Symphony, where she also plays. Somehow, she finds time for travel to exotic destinations, often to indulge her passion for scuba-diving through the "Dr. Seuss world under the waves." She's also a regular museumgoer, an opera buff who always welcomes "a chance to don a full-length gown and five-inch heels" and an enthusiastic dancer (despite having sprained her ankle on the dance floor—twice). It seems there's little that doesn't capture her imagination, and any guy who does will be lucky to.

Bob PAN, 29

Private-equity investor

A self-made man before the age of 30, this brainiac travels the world, interacting with captains of industry and tomorrow's tech moguls. Being an only child means he knows how to make his own fun, while having lived all over the globe—Fujian, New York, Chicago, Hong Kong—lends him a worldliness beyond his years. After graduating from Duke and pulling 100-hour weeks as an investment banker in New York, he moved to Boston six years ago without knowing a single soul in the city. Already, he's built an enviable social and professional network, having served on the board of the Boston Young Professionals, helping coordinate charity events like a date auction that raised money for Perkins School for the Blind. He also frequently plans big themed parties for his eclectic group of friends (most recently a Hunger Games soiree with some grueling party games). Part of a hip-hop dance troupe and a competitive bhangra team in college, he knows his way around a dance floor, and he's recently become a CrossFit devotee and Tough Mudder competitor. Comfortable in front of crowds and confident without being cocky, he's at home in his own skin and at least as much fun as a barrel of monkeys, though he prefers to put his business acumen to work in Monopoly and Settlers of Catan.

Rebecca ARNOLD, 28

Sous-chef at Alden & Harlow

The rare chef who's just as concerned about health as she is about flavor, this Easton native studied nutrition at UMass Amherst, ate her way through Europe and then moved to New York to attend the Natural Gourmet Institute for Health & Culinary Arts. After a stint at the gourmet vegetarian restaurant Millennium in San Francisco, she returned to Massachusetts and worked her way up the kitchen ladder to her current position at Harvard Square's newest claim to culinary fame. In 2012, she won the Bubbles and Burger competition at the Nantucket Wine Festival, perhaps because ACK is her happy place. She's a staunch supporter of Cape Abilities (a farm-based organization that serves the disabled on Cape Cod), formerly practiced and taught taekwondo, and paints, sails, skis and travels whenever she can. As her active Instagram account (@beccasarnold) attests, she's also the rare chef who likes to cook even when she's not working. In fact, she's a rare bird all around.

◀ Tim SABO, 30

Marketing manager for New Balance Baseball

As fiercely loyal as he is competitive, this native of New York was drafted by the Cleveland Indians right out of high school, but opted to pursue his education and attended Seton Hall University on a baseball scholarship. He left after his junior year, when he was eligible for the MLB draft again, and signed with the Chicago White Sox. He played in the minor league for the next three years, finishing his degree in the offseasons. He then tapped into his love of art to land a job in advertising, working at two agencies before landing his current (dream) job, which combines all his passions. The intense running culture at New Balance has instilled a newfound love for the sport: Since moving to Boston, he's participated in a few 5k and 5-mile races and become involved with November Project, a group-exercise community. He's also active with a nonprofit called Full Court Peace, which helps create youth basketball leagues in underserved communities. Because he still feels like a neophyte to the city, his 2014 resolution is to explore Boston as fully as possible—and whether he does it solo or with some lucky girl at his side, he plans to have a good time doing it.

▶ Kia KENNEY, 35

Owner of the Arthur Murray Dance Center of Cambridge

This graceful dancer isn't afraid of risky moves. A high school valedictorian in her native Sunshine State, she graduated with a bachelor's degree in Math/Systems from Taylor University in Indiana and spent four years as a management consultant, which only fed the love of international travel she'd developed during annual community-service trips as a teenager. (She has lived in England and the Philippines and to this day gets antsy unless she has an adventure on the horizon.) But she diverged from that career path to pursue her passion for dance, taking a year's leave of absence to tour the U.S. and Canada with a troupe. Ultimately, she decided to relocate to Boston and teach ballroom dancing full time. She made the Boston Arthur Murray Dance Center one of the chain's top 10 studios, and after six years of managing, she took another leap, opening her own Arthur Murray studio across the river last fall. When she's not teaching, she waltzes, tangoes and fox-trots at competitions at least one weekend each month. She's also involved with Dance for a Cure, a charity dedicated to ending prostate cancer. Admittedly addicted to sunshine, she enjoys pretty much any outdoor activity, and while she cops to being a perfectionist, she looks damn near perfect in our eyes.

▲ Ben ANDERSON, 36

Associate director of capital giving at Boston College

This six-foot-five bachelor has a big heart to match. After graduating from Bates College, he worked in sales for a Boston tech startup, but left to teach at an independent school. "Friends told me I was crazy for making the jump," he says, "but it was one of the best decisions I've ever made." Though he eventually left teaching, the experience cemented his passion for education and led him to a job in development at Skidmore College. He moved back to Boston three and a half years ago to fundraise for Habitat for Humanity, with which he's still actively involved. His current position has him raising money for B.C., working to match donors' philanthropic priorities with the university's needs. An avid skier, he spends a lot of time in his native Vermont, where his parents own an inn. He's a world traveler, too, having visited more than 30 countries and picked up passable German and Spanish (which helped him bribe his way out of a ticket during a Nicaragua trip). He also loves showing off his culinary chops and checking out new bars—and crushing the competition therein (his dart-league trophy is one of his prized possessions).

▲ Malia LAZU, 36

Co-founder and executive director of Future Boston Alliance

"Part Hawaiian, part Bostonian and all bad-ass" is how one of her friends describes her. Born and raised in Honolulu, she studied political communication at Emerson College, and is now the co-founder and executive director of Future Boston Alliance, a nonprofit organization dedicated to forging partnerships that will help the city realize its full potential. "I believe magic happens when communities collide," she says. Her skill as a political and social leader has garnered attention from Showtime, Fox News, WGBH and The Boston Globe (which also dubbed her one the city's most stylish people in 2013). She has managed campaigns for civil-rights activist Harry Belafonte and novelist Walter Mosley, and earned such accolades as Emerson's Walter Littlefield Distinguished Speaker Award and the MIT Mel King Community Fellowship. As for her idea of romance? "I am an island girl, so nothing beats a beautiful sunset, a nice drink and fish on the grill." Her favorite hobbies include brunch and reading the Sunday paper, but lest she seem too serious or sedentary, she also loves yoga, hiking, salsa dancing and travel, when she's not busy making the world a better place.

Dan HERMANN, 42

Co-founder of Paint Nite

Always a groomsman and never the groom (yet), he's been in 14 wedding parties and served as best man three times, which should give some indication of his upstanding character. The man behind the wildly popular Paint Nite—which offers social painting lessons led by artists at bars and restaurants in more than 60 cities and four countries—this serial entrepreneur also operates Lazybones Laundry, a college clothes-cleaning business that does 50,000 pounds of laundry per week in six states. A graduate of the University of Wisconsin-Madison with an MBA from Babson, he's originally from Newton. His New England roots show in his love of fishing, and in his spare time, you can find him on his 24-foot center-console boat. He also enjoys gardening and tending to his tropical aquariums. His extensive involvement in charity work includes organizing a yearly catch-and-release shark-fishing tournament to benefit the National Brain Tumor Society, as well as Paint Nite fundraisers for the Boys & Girls Clubs and Last Hope K9 Rescue. Supremely confident and a sharp dresser, he takes an out-of-the-box approach to romance that's as creative as the company he founded.

Jasmine HAGANS, 27

Curator of lectures, courses and concerts at the Museum of Fine Arts

By day, she brings acts like Califone, Lost in the Trees and Peter Yarrow to the Museum of Fine Arts. By night, she rocks out as drummer for Somerville "surf-doom" band Sleep Crimes. (Musical chops run in the family: Her father, Tim Hagans, is a Grammy-nominated jazz musician.) A native of Bucks County, Penn., this lesbian bachelorette graduated summa cum laude from Northeastern with a degree in music and interned at the MFA in college. She then worked as a tour manager, lighting designer and booking agent in the music industry in both Boston and New York. Having received a TEFL certificate in 2008, she also spent a year teaching English in Seoul, South Korea. In her current position, she oversees a broad range of programming, educating and engaging MFA patrons through more than 150 courses, performances and other events each year. A lifelong voracious reader (she'd finished the entire works of Laura Ingalls Wilder by third grade), she has been a volunteer teacher in the Cambridge Public Libraries' literacy program. She also enjoys cycling, running, tennis and dancing like no one's watching—and, in short, is the kind of girl any girl would be proud to bring home to her parents.

CJ HUSK, 33

Gentleman farmer and "oyster dude" at Row 34 and Island Creek Oysters

This bred-in-the-bone New Englander farms 130 acres of land that have been in his family since the 1700s, tending chickens, pigs, sheep and a cantankerous llama. That's in addition to his work with Island Creek Oysters in Duxbury, where his family has a vacation home and he's spent every summer of his life. Part of the Island Creek crew for the past six years, he pops up at new Fort Point hotspot Row 34 and sundry food and wine fests, shucking everywhere from SXSW to the Nantucket Wine Festival. A six-foot-four jack-of-all-trades, he worked as a bike messenger while rowing crew at Northeastern, plays the guitar and drums, can fix pretty much any American-made car or truck, could hang out a shingle as a carpenter, plumber or electrician, and has studied Thai yoga massage as well as sound acupuncture, a practice that involves planetary tuning forks, Tibetan singing bowls and astrology. And he still finds time to serve on the board of the Hollis Agricultural Commission and the Beaver Brook Association—2,000 acres of conservation land established by his grandfather. In short, he's outdoorsy, with a heart as big as the great outdoors.

Janice HEIL, 40+

Manager at Flor

Wildly witty and infinitely adaptable, this Massachusetts native graduated from Boston College and has worked in retail since the age of 16. She served as general manager of Barneys in Chestnut Hill until its 2011 closure; now she applies her genius for color, composition, design and making things pretty to the Back Bay carpeting boutique Flor. An admitted fashion and beauty junkie, she has a wardrobe any dictator's wife would envy and knows how to mix high and low, classic and trendy. But she's not just a girly girl: An avid sports fan, she discovered Twitter during a period of unemployment, and her snarky wit gained her more than 1,000 followers who hang on her every tweet about the Red Sox. Her ability to laugh at herself is part of her charm, and her strength and resilience are an indication that she doesn't need a man to complete her, though she's open to the possibility. Although she calls herself a procrastinator, one of her resolutions for 2014 was to venture outside her comfort zone. And by appearing in this issue, she's already done it, not two months into the year.

Samantha MERCER, 27

Preschool teacher

It's no surprise this beauty's idea of an ideal date involves live music. A graduate of Suffolk University, where she studied performing and visual arts, this Fall River native has appeared as a singer in 12 musicals. She went on to earn a master's degree in education from Simmons College and loves her job working with tots in Charlestown, where she now lives. An avid golfer thanks to her dad, she's a rabid Patriots fan and not only watches them religiously, but goes to the NFL draft every year with her father. Also in the tomboy category: She's a car nut and probably knows more about them than you do. Currently, the main love of her life is her 2-year-old Shih Tzu, Lotus, whom she dotes on. Outgoing, bubbly and a great listener—with a way of eliciting entire life stories by the end of conversations—she's also low-maintenance, witty and considerate, as well as easy on the eyes.

Matthew PIDGE, 29

Private chef to former Ambassador Swanee Hunt

Born and raised in Waltham and Lexington, this devastatingly handsome gay bachelor studied holistic health practice, nutrition and homeopathy at the American College of Healthcare Sciences. Without any formal culinary schooling, he beat out five highly trained toques for the position of private chef to the formidable Cambridge grand dame and Kennedy School lecturer Swanee Hunt, who entertains almost continuously. That means he frequently whips up formal dinners for 200, feeding such eminences as Gloria Steinem, U.S. senators and Afghan parliamentarians, as well as the extensive household staff. Off-hours, you can look for this former gymnast and avid snowboarder on the slopes almost every winter weekend, while summer finds him tending to his impressive garden and going on adventures—swimming along the calanques of Cassis in France, kayaking in Vietnam's Halong Bay or taking a three-week culinary and cultural tour of Italy. Deeply spiritual and unfailingly kind, he enjoys the symphony, opera and pretty much any cultural activity. In short, he's a much more pleasant version of Mrs. Patmore from Downton Abbey, trapped inside the body of a GQ model.

Sachin JAIN, 33

Doctor and health care advocate

"Overachiever" doesn't begin to describe him. A magna cum laude Harvard graduate, he went on to earn his M.D. and MBA, along the way founding a clinic to provide health care to the homeless. He served as a health care adviser in the Obama administration and now works as Merck's first-ever chief medical information and innovation officer, developing new ways of using data and technology to improve patient health. As if that's not enough, he continues to practice as a volunteer physician at the VA, teaches health care policy at Harvard Medical School and serves as co-founder and co-editor-in-chief of a health care journal. Somehow, he finds time to work out with a trainer, play tennis and take in live music (R&B is his favorite). A lifelong vegetarian, he also has a proven track record as a matchmaker, with five marriages to his credit. Extremely close to his family, he helps them operate a health and education trust in Rajasthan, India. We're exhausted just contemplating all his accomplishments.

AGENDA for 2/19–3/4

Down Under Daredevils

Infinite Jesters

YOU WON'T FIND LIONS, tigers or bears at Circus Oz—just fantastic feats. Celebrating its 35th anniversary, the Melbourne-based troupe combines death-defying action with vaudeville comedy and social satire. Their latest show, From the Ground Up, takes acrobats, jugglers, musicians and aerialists to new heights, drawing inspiration from 1920s silent movies, Charles Ebbets' 1930s photographs of workers atop skyscrapers and the 1940s Rosie the Riveter campaign. The animal-free production gets its thrills from multitalented performers—jugglers swing on the trapeze, acrobats play music and everyone clowns around. Take a peek beneath the big top at Citi Shubert Theatre through Feb. 23.

CHANGING TUNE

We've seen nonprofits come up with some pretty creative campaigns, but not one with song-and-dance numbers. Witness Uganda began as a 25-minute benefit performance; now it's a full-fledged documentary musical receiving its world premiere from the American Repertory Theater. Inspired by co-creator Griffin Matthews' own experience, it follows a young New Yorker who travels to Uganda to help to build a new school. He finds more than he bargained for: corruption, a complex relationship with a group of orphaned teens and a mission that will change all their lives forever. Bear witness at the Loeb Drama Center through March 16. / Rima Butto

MAGIC TOUCH The three-minute tracking shot that opens Touch of Evil is packed with suspense, but the real drama happened behind the scenes. Written and directed by Orson Welles, the 1958 thriller follows a narcotics officer (Charlton Heston) and his newlywed wife (Janet Leigh), who find themselves caught up in a scheme by a corrupt sheriff (Welles). Universal Pictures edited the film without Welles' input, reshooting some scenes and altering the final cut. That version prompted the enigmatic director to write a 58-page memo to the studio detailing fixes. Restored in 1998 thanks to Welles' notes, Touch of Evil plays on March 3 as part of the Big Screen Classics series at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. Hannah Weintraub PHOTOFEST

Reviews by Sean Burns

12 Years a Slave ★★★★ Despite being adapted by screenwriter John Ridley from Solomon Northup's own 1853 memoir, the astonishing 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have seen movies about the horrors of slavery before. But this one is about the mechanics. It is about process. Director Steve McQueen actually downplays the brutality of plantation life, all things considered. 12 Years a Slave merely asks you to meet its level gaze and accept the fact that all this actually happened. Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this cruel and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? Don't look away. (Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

American Hustle ★ ½ A gaudy spectacle of egregious overacting and silly wig humor, writer-director David O. Russell's indulgent riff on the FBI's "Abscam" sting operation is 2013's biggest embarrassment. Christian Bale hems, haws and makes a lot of De Niro faces as a con-artist dry-cleaning magnate suckered by Bradley Cooper's overzealous agent into setting up a crooked New Jersey mayor (Jeremy Renner). With the overlapping narration tracks, freeze frames, classic-rock soundtrack and cascading camera moves, Russell proves that not only has he seen Goodfellas and Casino, but that he liked them an awful lot. The ins and outs of the grifts aren't particularly interesting, so American Hustle ramps up a contrived love story with Bale and Cooper bickering for the affections of Amy Adams' duplicitous bad girl, who adopts a phony British accent and refuses to wear bras. Jennifer Lawrence eats scenery as Bale's harpy wife, once again stuck in a part for which she is at least 10 years too young. Everybody's miscast and overcompensating, while Russell's directorial karaoke comes off as Scorsese for dummies. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Anchorman 2: The Legend Continues ★★ Aren't comedy sequels the worst? Since you liked all those jokes the first time around, why not hear them again? Much in the way that increasingly diminished returns squashed whatever fond memories we had of the first Austin Powers and Hangover pictures, Will Ferrell and co-writer/director Adam McKay trot out numbskull newscaster Ron Burgundy for a victory lap through all those old quotes that obnoxious drunk people have been shouting at you in bars ever since the underperforming 2004 original became a cult hit. There's a nifty satirical idea here, as our moron correspondent decides that the news is too boring and sets the template for 24-hour cable stations by focusing exclusively on car chases, pets and empty patriotic slogans. Unfortunately, like every other idea in the movie, it's woefully underdeveloped, leaving the unseemly 112-minute running time to be padded out with non sequiturs and unstructured improv sessions that go nowhere. Top-heavy with pointless celebrity cameos, Anchorman 2 mistakes recognition for humor. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

August: Osage County ★★ Playwright Tracy Letts' honored opus is a cracker Eugene O'Neill riff hopped up on prescription meds and whiskey. It crams 10 or so members of the wildly dysfunctional Weston family into a sweltering, tiny space for all sorts of simultaneous outré revelations and profane recriminations. This literal hothouse ran for more than three hours every night on Broadway to both acclaim and exhaustion. Alas, awards have a way of ruining everything, and thus a severely truncated and defanged August: Osage County is now being presented to movie audiences with an all-star cast as a collection of Academy-friendly "For Your Consideration" meltdown clips. What played as a free-for-all cacophony upon the stage is flattened out by John Wells' pedestrian direction. Almost everyone not named Meryl Streep is pretty terrific in this picture, but that hour and change shorn from Letts' original script leaves most of these performers scrambling to define their characters without the writer's ammunition. Most of this movie feels like it was left on the cutting room floor. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Her ★★★★ We all spend too much time with our smartphones, but Joaquin Phoenix falls hard for Siri in this one-joke movie that blossoms into something of a miracle. Written and directed by Being John Malkovich and Where the Wild Things Are savant Spike Jonze, Her is a tender and ruefully funny meditation on modern relationships and what it means to love in a world where we're all in constant communication, yet seemingly lonelier than ever. The film is set in a quasi-futuristic Apple Store Los Angeles, where sentient operating systems work as personal secretaries. Samantha (voiced in an astounding performance by Scarlett Johansson) takes a shine to Phoenix's awkward, introverted Theodore, and the two develop a chemistry that's all the more remarkable because she never actually appears on screen. Her is almost overstuffed with philosophical musings on the role of technology in the way we live now. But in its big aching heart, it's a love story, and a great one. Relationships end and people grow apart, even when they live inside your phone. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

The Hunger Games: Catching Fire ★★ 1/2 What a difference a director makes. When we last caught up with Katniss Everdeen, she was reluctantly killing kids in Seabiscuit helmer Gary Ross' aesthetically ugly, sloppily staged adaptation of Suzanne Collins' young-adult megaseller. One year and a few hundred million dollars later, this series has fallen into the hands of filmmaker Francis Lawrence, of I Am Legend and the underrated Constantine fame. Lawrence has an eye for striking visuals but has never found a script to match his talent. He doesn't find one here either, but Catching Fire is still a huge improvement over its predecessor in nearly every way. Jennifer Lawrence's Katniss is back, shouldering the burden of martyrdom in a future dystopia where the rich enlist the poor to kill each other off in televised spectacles. Pulpy melodrama continues apace, but this time around with lush, burnished images and a budget to match the ambition. It's quite engrossing until the movie abruptly stops midscene, teasing another sequel coming soon to a theater near you. Sigh, the perils of franchise maintenance. (In the suburbs.)

Inside Llewyn Davis ★★★★ My favorite movie in years is the Coen brothers' most melancholic reverie, ditching their usual clockwork plotting for a loosey-goosey drift through a rotten week in the life of an itinerant troubadour skirting around the edges of the Greenwich Village scene in 1961. Oscar Isaac's Llewyn Davis is living hand-to-mouth without even a winter coat. Sharp, sour and more than a little bit of a dick, Llewyn is couch-surfing across Washington Square while pompously asserting his folk-singer superiority (Isaac strums a bunch from the Dave Van Ronk songbook, quite wonderfully). As the bleak, semi-surreal collection of anecdotes proceeds from bad to worse with the filmmakers' patented precision, the deadpan indifference of the Coens' cruel universe has never been so deeply felt, so soulfully sung or more mordantly hilarious. Bending itself into a Möbius strip of back-alley beatdowns, Inside Llewyn Davis is a movie for acerbic also-rans shat upon by life—a salute to all the people who never made it. It's a triumphant ode to failure. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and West Newton.)

The Invisible Woman ★★★ 1/2 The kind of quiet, thoughtful pleasure that's too often overlooked in the winter glut of higher-profile Oscar-season releases, this delicately wrought sophomore effort from director Ralph Fiennes slipped into area theaters under the radar. It's worth seeking out. Based on Claire Tomalin's book, it dishes the dirt on a whispered-about affair between Charles Dickens (Fiennes) and teenage actress Nelly Ternan (Felicity Jones). This is a movie of repressed desires expressed in the space between words. Every conversation seems to be in code. In thrall more to the man's writing than the man himself, Jones delivers an exquisitely internalized performance. He loves her more than she loves him back, and the imbalance weighs on Nelly's heart. The Invisible Woman's deliberate pacing and muted tone might try the patience of viewers enticed by the scandalous subject matter who are expecting a more typically Dickensian melodrama. But if you can get on the movie's wavelength, there is great power in the stillness, and in Ralph Fiennes as a major filmmaker. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Jack Ryan: Shadow Recruit ★★ Following in the undistinguished footsteps of Alec Baldwin, Harrison Ford and Ben Affleck, Chris Pine is the latest actor saddled with the thankless task of tackling Tom Clancy's tedious CIA analyst in Paramount's decades-spanning, never-say-die attempt to build a franchise around this blank-slate character. Cherry-picking stray elements of backstory scattered here and there in Clancy's novels, the film tells a purportedly "original" tale of Ryan's recruitment into the agency and his rather ludicrous attempt to stop a glowering Russian baddie (director Kenneth Branagh, hamming it up with a "keel-moose-and-squirrel" accent) from blowing up the U.S. economy. As generic as the title suggests, Shadow Recruit suffers from its modest budget and lack of immediacy, which make it feel less like a theatrical movie and more like the pilot for a CBS procedural you probably wouldn't watch. The only distinctive element is a gruff, very funny turn from Kevin Costner as Ryan's grouchy mentor. It's good to see him back in movies; too bad this was the best he could get. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Labor Day (no stars) Adapted from a Joyce Maynard novel and directed by 36-year-old Jason Reitman with a solemnity so inflated it defies all logic, common sense and presumably several of God's holy commandments, this is a spectacularly awful film. Behold the heartbreaking tale of pubescent Henry (Gattlin Griffith), stuck in a ramshackle house with his sad-sack mother Adele (Kate Winslet). Convicted murderer Josh Brolin has just escaped from a prison infirmary, seemingly waiting for a family with a hot mom who looks like Kate Winslet he can hold hostage for the holiday weekend. The courtliest kidnapper you've ever seen, Brolin immediately sets about fixing the stone work in their crumbling basement, cleans the gutters, changes the oil in the family station wagon and teaches Henry how to throw a knuckleball. It's love at first abduction, with a central erotic set piece that's a howler for the ages. A hideous harlequin romance with all the good parts cut out, Labor Day is thrillingly atrocious. I felt alive again as I left the theater. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Lone Survivor ★★ Good intentions don't always make good movies. The story goes that director Peter Berg agreed to the indignity of directing Battleship, just so long as the studio agreed to fund this bruising, bloody tribute to Navy SEALs fighting in Afghanistan. Working from Marcus Luttrell's memoir (the title of which is a huge spoiler), the film follows four guys stranded in Taliban territory, shooting it out for some 50-odd minutes of screen time in a blow-by-blow account of an operation gone wrong. Lone Survivor means well, but is unbearably dull. Mark Wahlberg, Ben Foster and Emile Hirsch strangle their wild screen personas as interchangeable embodiments of all that is stoic and decent about America. Only Berg's Friday Night Lights discovery Taylor Kitsch is allowed a personality, so of course he doesn't stick around long. The movie ignores geopolitical context in favor of long, slow-motion sequences of heroes dying noble deaths to an overwrought electric guitar score by Explosions in the Sky. By the end it feels like a recruiting ad in which everybody dies. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Nebraska ★★ Everything about Nebraska, Alexander Payne's sixth feature and first stinker, feels secondhand. It's a gimmicky sitcom script gussied up with self-consciously "artful" affectations borrowed from the New Hollywood heyday of the early '70s. Except it doesn't even get those right. The picture's entire aesthetic design comes off like a wiseass kid dressing up in his cool uncle's old clothes and wearing them wrong. The terminally bland Will Forte stars as a stereo salesman who takes a road trip with his gruff, alcoholic father (Bruce Dern), who thinks he's won a million dollars from a Publishers Clearing House-type sweepstakes letter he recently got in the mail. There's a tension between Dern's crumbling old-school masculinity and Forte's modern-guy ineffectualness that goes maddeningly unexplored. It's just really boring and sad. The pacing is so gummed up by homages to The Last Picture Show that if you removed all the shots of deteriorating storefronts, this 115-minute film would barely be feature length. Despite the ostentatious visual scheme and constant callbacks to cinematic giants, Nebraska feels flatter than the landscapes it depicts. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Past ★★★ As you might recall from 2011's Oscar-winning A Separation, Iranian filmmaker Asghar Farhadi's family dramas unfold in a classical, patient tradition punctuated by bombshell revelations—sort of like if Ibsen or Chekhov wrote mystery novels. His latest, The Past, transplants the action to Paris, where The Artist's Bérénice Bejo awaits the arrival of her estranged husband (Ali Mosaffa). After four years of minimal contact, these two are supposed to be finally getting a divorce so she can marry her new beau (Tahar Rahim, from A Prophet). As in Farhadi's previous picture, nothing is quite as it appears on the surface. Information is parceled out gradually, so we're left to puzzle over strange emotional exchanges as a bigger, thornier picture only slowly becomes clear. There's a lot more than meets the eye going on in this household, too much maybe. But even as his plot teeters into melodrama, the filmmaker keeps tight control of the formal compositions and deftly underplayed performances. Expanding in scope as it goes along, the movie grows on you. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

Saving Mr. Banks ★½ Purporting to be the true story of how Walt Disney convinced uptight author P.L. Travers to let him adapt her precious Mary Poppins books for the big screen, Saving Mr. Banks is a steaming plate of corporate propaganda with a side of character assassination. It's also a movie about a contract negotiation, and about as interesting as that sounds. Though in real life she was reportedly a bar-crawling bisexual single mother, the film presents Travers as a miserable spinster played by a tut-tutting Emma Thompson, who seems to be channeling the host of Weakest Link. Tom Hanks' twinkly Uncle Walt not only wins her over with whimsy, but also therapeutically resolves Travers' issues about her long-dead alcoholic father (well played by Colin Farrell in flashbacks) until tears and soppy music ensue.

Sun Ra Cosmic Centenary

Born in 1914 in Birmingham, Alabama, Sun Ra was a composer, keyboardist, visionary, philosopher, poet, and self-proclaimed visitor from Saturn, as well as the most eclectic and electric jazz musician and bandleader of the 20th century. His music ranged from keyboard solos to extravagant mytho-poetic multimedia performances with his large Arkestra, and touched on nearly the entire history of jazz, from ragtime to swing music and from bebop to free jazz.

Please join us for a special Sun Ra Cosmic Centenary concert featuring an all-star faculty Arkestra with a very special appearance by Sun Ra Arkestra members Marshall Allen, Charles Davis, and Danny Ray Thompson. Produced by Dave Clark. Copresented with Africana Studies.

February 23
The Great American Songbook: Great Women Songwriters

Concert begins at 7:30 p.m.

Female composers have made an indelible mark on the Great American Songbook. Berklee students and faculty will showcase great songs from the pen of Aretha Franklin, Dorothy Fields, Bessie Smith, Carole King, and Billie Holiday, just to name a few. Vocalists Donna McElroy, Natalia Sulca, Jennifer Hoyt, Nigel Tay, Gabriela Carrillo, and Tickwanya Jones will present memorable performances of some of the best songs ever written. Produced by the Yo Team.

Saving Mr. Banks advocates artists selling out to a corporation that always knows best. Hanks smuggles in a few grace notes of prickly determination in a movie that's otherwise an infomercial for the company that produced it. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Tim's Vermeer ★★½ Magicians Penn and Teller have spent a career playfully twisting and debunking aspects of their act, in recent years taking a similar approach to the wider culture as well, à la their pointedly titled television show Bullshit!. This initially engrossing but ultimately thin documentary, directed by Teller, may have been better suited for a TV segment. The Tim of the title is Tim Jenison, an inventor and tech whiz who made millions in the video industry. Obsessed with the idea that Dutch master Johannes Vermeer was using optics to create his unparalleled portraits, Tim rigs up a mirrored contraption based on 17th-century camera obscura equipment and sets about painting his own replica of The Music Lesson. Like most Penn and Teller projects, Tim's Vermeer shows you the trickery behind the trick and leaves you astounded all the same. There are some fascinating ideas here about the arbitrary line drawn by historians between invention and artistry, but even at 80 minutes the film feels distended and dragged out. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

The Wind Rises ★★★½ Master animator Hayao Miyazaki has announced this will be his final film, and it's quite the departure from his fantasy tales. A relatively straightforward biopic of aeronautical engineer Jiro Horikoshi, The Wind Rises doubles as a lyrical, doom-laden portrait of a country on the precipice of disaster, and a sad meditation on the role of an artist during wartime. Nearsighted Jiro is obsessed with aviation but unfit to fly, channeling his passion into designing planes. As Japan gears up for World War II, the movie sinks into a melancholy groove, admiring Jiro's spirited innovations while dreading the inevitable outcome. It works in a slower, sadder register than most contemporary pictures, dwelling on small moments of beauty with an apocalypse on the horizon. As with most Miyazaki movies, Disney has prepared an English language dub for American theaters. I'm not sure it was necessary this time, as this mournful tale is decidedly not for children. The dubbed version does, however, boast Werner Herzog as a sly, mysterious German, so kudos on the voice casting. (At Kendall Square.)

Winter's Tale ★ The darndest barrel of nonsense to hit screens in quite some time, hack screenwriter Akiva Goldsman's directorial debut is a goofy, unintentionally hilarious take on Mark Helprin's novel. Colin Farrell stars as a dashing burglar with a heart of gold, falling madly in love with a young heiress dying of consumption, and they both end up flying on a winged pegasus around turn-of-the-century New York City. Farrell's on the run from Russell Crowe's scar-faced mob boss, who speaks in a comical Lucky Charms Irish accent and also happens to be an ancient demon. There's much ado about prophesies and miracles, as characters run around frantically trying to explain the mumbo-jumbo rules of this fantasy universe to one another—and all that's before the story leaps ahead a century, when Farrell emerges from the East River with no memory and we have to start all over again. By the time an unbilled superstar randomly shows up as Satan, I was convinced I'd fallen asleep in the theater and was having the strangest dream. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Wolf of Wall Street ★★★★ An obscenity, an abomination and the movie this country deserves right now. Martin Scorsese's epic assault on propriety and good taste stars Leonardo DiCaprio as stockbroker scumbag Jordan Belfort, one of the countless who looted the American Dream and gagged on the spoils of wretched excess. It's another Scorsese gangster picture, only this time it's white-collar and played out as a broad, bilious farce. Pumped up with adrenaline and cocaine, the picture blasts off like a rocket ship into such a frenzied orgy of sex, drugs and decadence that both Hunter S. Thompson and Federico Fellini might consider it a bit much. The Wolf of Wall Street zings at warp speed from one fiendishly entertaining, appalling set piece to another, until the movie's gargantuan three-hour running time reveals Scorsese's moral severity. It's all too much too-much-ness about people for whom too much was never enough. The grotesque excess becomes deadening and the emptiness chilling. DiCaprio is fearlessly smarmy, Jonah Hill makes a revolting sidekick, and they heroically debase themselves in the funniest, angriest movie of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

ALL THAT JAZZ When most college seniors were scrambling for job advice, Jason Anick was tuning his musical career on tour with Grammy Award-winning guitarist John Jorgenson. Now the 28-year-old jazz violinist and mandolin player is one of Berklee's youngest instructors and in demand to teach jazz workshops nationwide. He also finds time to play with several jazz ensembles, among them the Jason Anick Quartet, which is celebrating the release of its new album, Tipping Point, full of eclectic compositions that blend acoustic with electric, Gypsy jazz with swing, hard bop and a host of other styles. Let Anick teach you a lesson in boundary-busting jazz on Feb. 25 at the Regattabar. / Frankie Barbato PHOTO: ANDY CAMBRIA

MAP QUEST We doubt Paul Revere had to stop for directions during his midnight ride. The guy knew his way around, as shown by this southeastern view of the city by Revere, a detailed engraving now on display as part of Made in Boston at the Norman B. Leventhal Map Center. Boston was a leading producer of navigational aids, and the exhibit offers an unconventional look at the city's history, featuring 17th- and 18th-century nautical charts, battle plans and maps (including a 1667 specimen that was the first ever printed in the colonies). There's a map for that at the Boston Public Library through March 10. / Abagail Sullivan PHOTO COURTESY OF THE AMERICAN ANTIQUARIAN SOCIETY

Deeiding on the right Instagram filter is hardly the toughest quandary faeing today's hashtagging teens. But Danah Boyd, a researeh assistant professor at NYU and fellow at Harvard's Berkman Center for Internet and Society, suggests that their soeial-media landscape isn't quite the minefield that fearmongering headlines may lead us to believe. In her new book, It's Complicated, she draws on interviews with adoleseents from across the country to explore the relationship between soeial media and identity, privacy and safety, finding that adult misconceptions about teens' online habits may distract from real challenges and deny powerful forms of engagement. girl scouts of eastern massachusetts

So yummy and so good for the community

All Girl Scout cookies have a mission

Whether selling Thin Mints, Caramel deLites, or another of eight delicious flavors, a girl gains skills and confidence from running her own business, interacting with customers, and working with her peers.

And it's about the importance of giving back

Tell a Girl Scout you want to support Cookies for a Cause, and we will donate the cookies you purchase to a soldier overseas or a local food bank. While you're at it, treat yourself to a box!

Girl Scout cookies are available until March 4.

CONTEST OF THE MONTH

Q: How do you stop a lawyer from drowning?
A: Shoot him before he hits the water.

That was just one of the many lawyer jokes flying fast and furious at Veterans Legal Services' annual gala at the Ritz-Carlton.

While white-clad waiters passed apps and the all-female Jazzabelles played such appropriate selections as the theme song to Perry Mason, a mix of members of the legal profession and men and women in uniform grazed on a Mediterranean buffet and exchanged pleasantries and business cards.

Present and accounted for: the evening's honorees, former attorney general Scott Harshbarger and Dan Magoon of the Mass. Fallen Heroes Memorial, gorgeous blond sports and entertainment lawyer Kristen Kuliga, the smiling Irish eyes of father and son Brian McLaughlin Sr. and Jr., the toothsome threesome of Julia Dunne, Nicole Donnelly and Kelsey Montgomery, and so on and so forth.

The evening's program began with a bit of pomp that almost went wrong when the USS Constitution color guard barely missed hitting the chandelier with their flags. But otherwise, everything went off without a hitch, unless you count one guest's awkward first encounter with Mayor Marty Walsh. As His Honor tried to exit with his phalanx of handlers hot on his heels, the unfortunate individual blocked the door, nearly causing a head-on collision and a multi-carcass pileup. The first reader to guess the oaf's identity will win an Improper Bostonian T-shirt. Email entries to jonathan@improper.com.

OUT OF THE MOUTHS OF BABES

Fun fact: The Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. met his wife, Coretta Scott, when she was a student at New England Conservatory.

That made Jordan Hall the perfect place to observe MLK Day, when the Boston Children's Chorus presented their annual tribute concert.

A reception preceded the SRO performance, which attracted the likes of uber-pillar of the community Hubie Jones, arts educator Akiba Abaka, design genius Daren Bascombe with brunette beauty Luciana Triplett, board president Tim Ferguson, former Ambassador Swanee Hunt, conductor Ben Zander, sax legend Stan Strickland, banking babe Jessica Bowers, the dashing doctor Keith Magee with his nephew, Kendall, budding broadcaster Liz Strzepa, outspoken actress Carmen Dillon and former BCC member Meghan Fitton, who wowed the crowd during the cocktail hour with a rendition of Nina Simone's "I Wish I Knew."

The concert earned a thunderous standing ovation and also prompted the observation "I wish I had a nickel for every Martin Luther King quote I saw today on Facebook."

THE AGONY OF DEFEAT...

Ever wonder what it feels like to compete in the final round of a reality show?

Well, yours truly found out at the Anna's Taqueria Celebrity Burrito Roller Finale, held at the Harvard Street location. For the past year, the chain has had local personalities roll burritos to raise money for the charity of their choice, donating nearly $20,000 to causes like the Pine Street Inn and the Women's Lunch Place. At the finale, we were rolling against the clock to win another donation and all the bragging rights.

The competition was stiff. First up was broadcasting behemoth Henry Santoro, who came in around 39 seconds, followed by Tom O'Keefe (also known as @BostonTweet), who deserved points for tidiness. Then—boom!—came Aurore Ounjian of the band Mean Creek, who broke the 25-second barrier and confirmed the stereotype that musicians are good at rolling things. By this point, I needed a Valium and was literally shaking, but I managed to sneak into second place. That changed quickly thanks to ballerina and food blogger Rachel Cossar. However, we were all blown out of the water by Sweet Cheeks owner Tiffani Faison (who, I should point out, is a professionally trained chef and a former Top Chef contestant).

To the Caring for Carcinoid Foundation: I'll do better next time. To MassEquality: I'm glad you won. To Tiffani Faison: I challenge you to a game of Scrabble. ◆

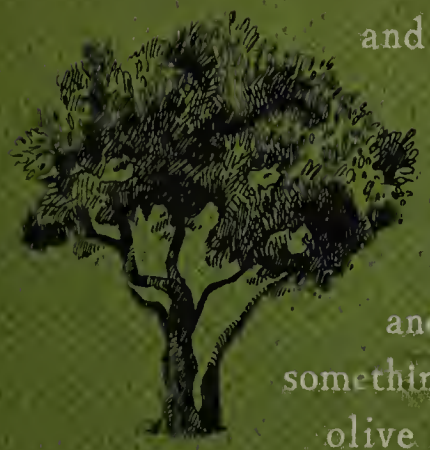
WE LOVE OLIVES SO MUCH, WE GAVE THEM THEIR OWN CHIP AND THEIR OWN AD.

That isn't to say we're the only ones captivated by the fruit. Olive trees have been cultivated since before recorded history. So when it came time to choose the olives that go in our chips, we didn't need to change a process that already worked. That's why we only use the very best Kalmata, Green and Niçoise olives, crafting one of the more unique chips you'll ever come across. Our combination of Spanish, Mediterranean and French olive varieties is something even the most seasoned olive aficionados will enjoy.



Diced Green olives provide the chip with a mild, olive base. While the darker Kalmata olive adds a fruity sweetness. Finally, the black Niçoise olive gives it a bold, slightly nutty flavor that forms a continental blend you can actually see. These aren't your everyday chips. And given that you made it this far into an ad about olives, we can't help but think it's your kind of snack. Try them with hummus or spinach dip to compliment the chip's natural, savory flavor. Or if you're only in it for the olives, they go just as well by themselves.

SPRINGING FORWARD

AFTER REPEATEDLY BEING PUMMELED by the polar vortex, I suspect most of us have been wishing we could fast-forward to spring. Fortunately, time travel is one of many forms of fantasy that fashion allows us. Runways preview collections from several seasons ahead, and we shot our Spring Fashion feature—full of crop tops and cutout details, playsuits and off-the-shoulder styles—in the depths of January. Culling inspiration from warmer climes on several continents, Lydia Santangelo transports us to a tropical paradise of palm fronds, banyan trees and, yes, live parrots. Packed with punchy colors and bold patterns, it's the perfect antidote to the late-winter blues. Santangelo also serves up an accessories spread that offers a fresh spin on spring's pastels, which are more edgy than Easter egg when done in high-gloss finishes and paired with metallic bling.

Elsewhere, Alix Childs takes a look at the season's lightweight leathers in unexpected textures. Hannah Sheinberg talks to local designer "Sassy Sam" Donovan, who's currently showing off his skills on Project Runway: Under the Gunn. And for our Escape Artist column, I check into a cool new hotel in Providence, a city that's burnished its fashion cred over the past five years thanks to the success of StyleWeek. It's of course also home to the RISD Museum, whose vast collection includes plenty of sartorial treasures, like the delightfully kooky 1966 maternity dress by the Brookline-born, MassArt-trained Mimi Smith I fell for during my visit. The print is subtle, the shade a demure gray, but front and center is a clear plastic dome that exposes exactly what the maternity wear of the day desperately attempted to hide. It's a reminder that fashion can be art, a lens into the zeitgeist—and a lot of fun too.

NEEDLE POINTS

DESIGNER SAM DONOVAN ON UNDER THE GUNN »»

Sew to Speak

Boston-area native and recent Parsons School of Design grad Sam Donovan knows how to fashion a successful coming-of-age tale, given that his first post-college gig involves showing off his designs to Tim Gunn and a national television audience. On Lifetime's Project Runway: Under the Gunn, hosted by a Heidi Klum-less Gunn, the 23-year-old contestant seamlessly won the affection of all three of the show's mentors on his first challenge, displaying what former Project Runway contestant Nick Verreos called a "use of fabric far beyond his years." A fan of deceptively comfortable clothes, Taylor Swift and Gunn's laugh, Donovan tells us how he breaks the mold while sewing inside the lines. / Hannah Sheinberg

ON DESIGNING UNDER PRESSURE
"There's less time to second-guess what you're doing, so if you're a good designer with good instincts, you can really come up with these beautiful, uninhibited ideas that you might not have the balls to otherwise."

ON THE WORKROOM ATMOSPHERE
"The energy in the workroom is a lot more lighthearted than they like to portray on the show. The editors, for whatever reason, try to make us look really detached from each other...I personally hate watching Project Runway when it's basically just manufactured drama, so I hope that Under the Gunn decides to take a different editing direction. If I end up bored watching myself on TV, I'll know there's a problem."

ON STYLING TIM GUNN
"I'd love to put Tim Gunn in a super-chic sweatshirt. I know that he's a fan of his suits and his turtlenecks, but I think that he'd probably dig my more Bostonian—i.e., utilitarian—fashion sense."

ON HIS COMPETITION
"I think I helped out at least one designer per challenge because I think if you're not willing to help out another designer—if you can—it has much more to do with the lack of confidence you have in your design than anything else."

ON LIVING UP TO HIS "SASSY SAM" MONIKER
"I think the sassiest instance thus far was when I told Stephanie [Ohnmacht] that if she sent her model down the runway assless, she'd be going straight home. I think I say something about Kit Harington's abs, too, but honestly, how does one resist those?"

LIQUID ART, SOLID FOOD

CHEF RACHEL KLEIN'S NEW CANVAS

FIRST, INSTALL A GENEROUS HELPING of art; drain away any pretentiousness. Next, skim it for inspiration to develop a thematically complementary menu. Finally, serve it with a sense of fun, making sure it's approachable and engaging for diners. That's a foretaste of the recipe for Liquid Art House, a 10,000-square-foot restaurant/art gallery powered by the "creative flow between all forms of media" as well as food, according to curator Ana-Katarina Vinkler-Petrovic.

For executive chef Rachel Klein (Mandarin Oriental Hotel, Seaport Hotel, OM), the project speaks to her pre-culinary background as an art history major. The menu is "inspired by the changing artists and installations in the space," Klein says, so the initial bar menu will be a "street food concept" to match the street art exhibition that will be on display during the opening. Think "a really funky stuffed soft taco" or "a fun interpretation of a gyro." (Keith Haring Herring, anyone?)

In addition to the bar menu, which will feature shareable food, Klein promises high-end tasting menus and "an amazing French rotisserie" that will turn out whole animals roasted to order. A Bavarian baker will create "four to five different types of bread per night," adds Klein, such as milk rolls, "dark, dark" sourdough, pita and pretzel bread. The pastry chef—Giselle Miller, formerly of Deuxave—is "fantastic," Klein says. And "there's a lot of eye candy: the art, the food, the cocktails, the chair you're sitting on—everything is custom."

Well, perhaps not everything, but Vinkler-Petrovic says calls for creative submissions—both for art and furnishings—garnered "a really healthy response." You can check out the art, furnishings and food when the 200-seat Liquid Art House opens on Arlington Street, likely in April.

PETIT ROBERT'S BIG HIRE

There's a new chef at Petit Robert Bistro in the South End, but there's no cause for alarm among Francophiles: He's French. (Well, of French heritage, at least.) Italian-born Stefano Quaresima has just introduced his first menu, drawing on his cultural background and experience at the likes of Paris' La Tour d'Argent (two Michelin stars) and Lyon's Chateau de Bagnols (one Michelin star) to offer coq au vin with fettucine and duck magret with a honey sesame crust.

VALUED EURO: Stefano Quaresima trained in Paris.

BASTILLE ON POINT

SETH GREENBERG AIMS HIGH IN A HOT 'HOOD.

Seth Greenberg stands in the middle of his soon-to-open Bastille Kitchen in Fort Point with saws buzzing and hammers pounding all around him. It's the sound of progress that's echoed recently throughout the neighborhood, and the renowned nightclub magnate/restaurateur/hotelier is far from surprised. Greenberg recalls long ago talking to real-estate investors about Fort Point's potential, which he saw not only in the buildings' aesthetics but in the proximity to the convention center.

"I said to them, do you realize what you're sitting on here? You're sitting on the Meatpacking District," he says, referencing the once-dilapidated, now-trendy New York neighborhood.

The latest addition to the dynamic neighborhood is the largest dining spot in the area. Bastille Kitchen, set to open in early April, is a 240-seat French bistro with a menu from chef Adam Kube that aims for rich flavors.

"It's about taking the time to develop every flavor at every step of the cooking process. It'll take eight hours to make the onion soup," says Kube, who was previously the executive sous-chef at the Ritz-Carlton in Boston. "The food is going to be French bistro with a modern twist. We're focusing on great portions and great flavor."

Roasted bone marrow with sherry maple-glazed sweetbreads will maintain that mantra, as will a seafood sausage composed of cod, shrimp, lobster and herbs that makes an appearance in a couple of dishes. Kube plans to use the nearby Tea Party museum as an inspiration for some items, including tea-smoked mussels and an Earl Grey crème caramel. He'll also use tea in the brine for the roast lamb shank, which will come with eggplant pavé, herb grits and a pressed tomato.

The restaurant has two levels, with the downstairs—decked out in dark leather, tartan, paisley and velvet—able to accommodate 90 for private dining or turn into a chic lounge spot later in the evening. The upstairs will have a bar and lounge seating, as well as a communal table and three "power booths" for bigwigs who want a private space. The real eye-catcher amid the two-tops and four-tops in the dining area will be the single banquette that runs along the side windows from the front of the building to the back. Greenberg boasts, "It might be the biggest banquette in the city."

The bigger the seats, the more room for the Fort Point crowd, which seems to grow nightly.

"The more that goes here, the stronger it becomes," he says. "The idea of having Row 34, having Ming [Tsai] across the street. These are really good, strong places that help breed a community."

Q&A

BROAD HUMOR

Comedian Hannibal Buress takes a break from playing a weird dentist named Lincoln on Comedy Central's new show Broad City to perform two shows on March 8 at the Wilbur.

I CAN'T QUITE FIGURE LINCOLN OUT. HOW WOULD YOU DESCRIBE THE GUY? Lincoln is just a cool dentist, you know? He's just trying to make money and trying to get Ilana to settle down, and Ilana is not trying to settle down. She's a little younger. She's out there f---ing around and being immature. But Lincoln is being patient with her, because she's got the box!

IF YOU MADE AN APPOINTMENT AT A NEW DENTIST AND WERE INTRODUCED TO LINCOLN, WOULD YOU LET HIM WORK ON YOUR TEETH? If I was going to the dentist, I would have Yelped him and seen all types of reviews and made sure he was reputable. Then, yeah, I would go to Lincoln! ... Lincoln would probably have 3.5 stars on Yelp, which is not bad.

WHAT'S SOMETHING REALLY WEIRD THAT'S HAPPENED TO YOU ONSTAGE? There's a video online, if you search my name and "hipster heckler," of this couple in the Knitting Factory in Brooklyn. They had a bunch of clothes and lamps, and they start dancing around. And this dude just starts throwing clothes on stage. It really made me mad! Another funny thing is when somebody heckles, and I'll handle them and use them for material for a few minutes, and then afterward they say, "Hey, I gave you material!" Like they saved the show, or if they weren't there I would just be sitting on stage saying nothing for 60 minutes.

THAT'S SOMETHING PARTICULAR TO STAND-UP. NOBODY TRIES TO RUIN A BAND'S SET. Yeah, that's like going to see a band and pulling out your own guitar and trying to play in the audience.

WHENEVER I INTERVIEW A COMEDIAN, I LIKE TO ASK, WHICH WAS MORE STRESSFUL: LOSING YOUR VIRGINITY OR DOING STAND-UP THE FIRST TIME? Losing my virginity. I was trying to lose my virginity for a long time, but I didn't want to do stand-up until maybe three weeks or a month before I started. So it was a lot less buildup, you know? / Alexandra Cavallo

BREAKING THE REALITY MOLD

The first thing to know about Mark Wahlberg's new reality show Breaking Boston is that it will in no way resemble Wicked Single, another Boston-based reality show that aired last year. In other words, if you're tuning in to watch young women get drunk, sleep with each other's boyfriends and throw punches, you should change the channel.

"We wanted to tell a story that's never been told before," says executive producer Stephanie Drachkovitch. "We've seen the fighting; we've seen people saying 'F you' across the dinner table to their family. What we really tried to do is capture some of the nuance and some of the reality we're not used to seeing."

That reality comes from four working-class women struggling to overcome big obstacles, including addiction and legal troubles— a far cry from the McMansions and the McDrama of, say, the Real Housewives franchise.

"Mark really wanted to capture the essence and the spirit of second chances, because he feels like that's what he got," Drachkovitch says.

The show draws inspiration from the tough women who played Wahlberg's on-screen sisters in the 2010 film The Fighter. None of these women, however, come from central casting. All four knew one another before filming, meaning the relationships are actually, well, real. Moreover, they're not out to score their 15 minutes of fame.

"In some cases, the girls didn't want to do the show. That's exactly opposite of what you [usually] see. One of the cast members, she had an amazing story but... she didn't want to put it all on television," says fellow executive producer Bill Thompson. "She called me yesterday, saying she's happy she did it." / Alexandra Cavallo

Breaking Boston premieres on March 13 at 10 pm on A&E.

Drink of the Moment
THE DECEMBER 5TH

PRICE: $12

INGREDIENTS: Tequila, Cointreau, fresh lime juice, roasted jalapeno and mint simple syrup

INVENTOR: Frank Reardon, head bartender

TASTE: Not like tequila! When it comes to mixing drinks, Reardon likes to ask his customers what they enjoy: "I like when someone says, 'I don't like gin.' Because then I can make a gin drink that I know for a fact that they would say they liked." So tequila haters, fear not.

REMINISCENT OF: A tarter Hemingway daiquiri. At first sip, the syrup's sweetness comes through, but "by the time it gets to the back of your throat, the jalapeno's going to kick in," Reardon says. "And then when you think it's hot, it changes again."

PAIR IT WITH: The spicy clams and chorizo dish ($13), which mimics its balance of flavors.

PHILOSOPHY: For 25 years, Reardon has been behind the bar at cocktail institutions like Eastern Standard, the Beehive and No. 9 Park. The old-school subscriber says, "My strength is 75 percent talking; 25 percent is making up drinks for people."

INQUIRE ABOUT: The scorned woman for which the cocktail club and restaurant is named. After two husbands left her for the bottle, Carrie Nation grabbed a hatchet and made it her personal mission to take down taverns serving alcohol.

WHICH IS WHY: The front bar is deliberately hidden from passersby by curtains—but not as hidden as the speakeasy tucked in the back with beaded lampshades, tufted leather seating and pool tables. / Sarah Hagman

CHEERS TO THAT: The new libation is named for the day Prohibition was repealed.

December Thieves isn't Lana Barakat's first store (she previously owned Lazuli on Newbury Street), but it's fitting that she's set up shop alongside up-and-coming artists in the SoWa district. Her four-month-old Harrison Avenue gallery is not only a showroom for her own bold jewelry designs, but also a treasure trove of handmade goods—wall hangings, soaps made one bar at a time and handsome serving pieces that are too pretty for food—that she's collected from artists all over the world, who you probably don't know yet, but should. / Elizabeth Bomze

Good Eats: Torta Time

Tenoch might be the best, least stereotypical North End restaurant to hit the neighborhood in a long time, and the taqueria's Torta Campechana might be the city's best sandwich. Campechana refers to a combination of elements—in this case, multiple forms of pork—and with falling-apart carnitas and fine-grained chorizo as well as beans, avocado, Oaxaca string cheese, red onions, tomatoes and chipotle mayo, it delivers big on that addictive combination of rich, fiery, crispy and refreshing. It's so generously filled that the plush, delicately crisp telera bread can barely hold it all together: Take owner Alvaro Sandoval's advice and have a seat. / Elizabeth Bomze

IN BLACK AND WHITE

REUNITED AFTER 40 YEARS, TWO WOMEN SEARCH FOR THE TRUTH.

Snapshot* by Lis Wiehl Published by Thomas Nelson, 320 pages, $27 hardcover

Harvard Law School graduate and former federal prosecutor Lis Wiehl's latest crime novel is partially set in Boston.

When Lis Wiehl discovered a photograph of her 4-year-old self and another little girl, taken by her FBI agent father at a civil rights demonstration in Texas in 1965, she also found the jumping-off point for her latest thriller. The title refers to that photo, which, in Wiehl's reimagining of the events, is taken at a march where civil rights leader Benjamin Gray is killed. The white girl is Lisa; the black girl, Molly. Forty years later, they meet again as Lisa's retired G-man father (who took the picture) obsessively investigates Gray's murder, of which a black man, now facing execution, was falsely accused.

The actual bad guy, the heartless Stanley Blackstone, is memorably drawn. His daughter, running for Senate, has changed her name in hopes of distancing herself from his racism. In a surprising twist, the sleazy Blackstone's first love is revealed to be a half-black woman, who also once dated Benjamin Gray. Other secrets abound, one involving a key to a cabinet Bobby Kennedy locked after JFK's assassination.

Wiehl's characters vividly—yet subtly—propel the story's complex relationships. Molly, a minister, and Lisa, a federal prosecutor, forge an alliance that unites the soothing balm of faith and the muscle of law. And Lisa and her long-estranged father likewise reconnect, warily, in their quest for the truth.

From page 47: Stanley grabbed a wooden mallet and popped the writhing fish in the head. It stilled immediately. Stanley squeezed its long jaw to show the line of intimidating teeth, then he kissed it smack on its cold, scaly cheek.

"It's good luck to always kiss your kill," he told Marcus. ◆

The area is eminently walkable, but if you want wheels, the Dean offers a Zipcar and five vintage bicycles restored by Providence's Recycle-a-Bike.

Got a group? The Dean's fifth floor—dubbed "The Heights"—features four guest rooms that can be connected into a 1,500-square-foot suite.

BOUTIQUE CHIC IN DOWNCITY PROVIDENCE

THE BUILDING AT 122 FOUNTAIN ST. IN Providence has long welcomed strangers. Built in 1912 as an Episcopal rescue mission, it was a refuge "downtown in the center of things on an almost respectable street, its door wide open to everyone," as one text from the time describes. In more recent years it offered a very different brand of hospitality as the Sportsman's Inn, a strip club with rent-by-the-hour rooms upstairs. Now, it's been restored and transformed into the Dean, a brand-new boutique hotel that reflects the renaissance of its Downcity neighborhood, which has been revitalized into a dynamic arts district (albeit one where you can still find "spas" with some unusual operating hours).

A counterpoint to the big corporate chains that dot the area, the Dean is the first hotel project from Brooklyn real estate development and design firm ASH NYC, and the latter specialty shows in its 52 spartan yet stylish guest rooms. They're full of details to delight a design geek: industrial-chic exposed-bulb lighting from Vermont, sleek mid-century-style furnishings and one-of-a-kind vintage finds from Dutch dealers, Belgian vendors and French antique markets (the source of the assorted portraits of distinguished gents that appear in each room). ASH's 30-year-old CEO grew up in Providence, and affection for local artisans abounds, with beds and desks forged in Providence's Steel Yard and elephant side tables cast in concrete by RISD alum Will Reeves. Even the in-room snacks (Yacht Club sparkling water, Glee Gum, Rip van Wafels) have a Providence pedigree. No two rooms share the same shape and size, and the commitment to minimalism extends to other quirks—phones in the corridors instead of the guest rooms, wall hooks and hangers in place of drawers and closets, open-door glass showers—that may put off some travelers, but perhaps not the young urban adventurers who seem to be the Dean's target demo, especially with room rates starting at $109 and luxe touches like the cloudlike bedding from Fall River's Matouk.

The Dean's lobby is envisioned as a collective gathering space à la New York's Ace Hotel. And with indie coffee company Bolt operating a buzzing bar there, guests and locals are already lingering over Chemex brews on the velvet sofas and pommel horse benches, surrounded by art books, design glossies and plentiful outlets for laptops. Soon to come are other options for food and drink: intimate cocktail den the Magdalenae Room, sausage- and pretzel-slinging beer hall Faust, and the Boombox, a Seoul-style karaoke lounge decked in red and black with five private rooms—the only ones on the property still rented by the hour.

Those three venues are slated to open this month, but, in the meantime, there are plenty of gems within easy walking distance. Take the Eddy, a cocktail boîte offering concoctions such as the fun and fizzy Bottle Rocket, a tart blend of bols genever, kalamansi syrup, lemon and Peychaud's bitters finished with foam and a luxardo cherry. Pink at the bottom and blue at the top, it's like a cocktail whipped up by the feuding fairy godmothers in Sleeping Beauty. Just around the corner is Flan y Ajo, a tiny tapas joint where elbow-to-elbow cooks prepare your pintxos in full view, working wonders with just a couple of burners and an oven. It's BYOB, but there's a wine shop right next door. And just a few steps from the hotel is Ken's Ramen, a newly opened noodle spot that's already drawing raves (and lines).

As for nearby entertainment, there are funky shops like Cellar Stories, the state's largest used and rare bookstore, with 70,000 tomes and specialties that include New England history, vintage sci-fi paperbacks and even a shelf labeled "Books Joe Hates." Community arts center AS220 offers daily shows and classes, spanning four galleries, several performance spaces, a restaurant and bar, a recording studio, an electronics and fabrication lab, a print shop, a darkroom and dozens of live/work studios. And the award-winning Trinity Repertory Company is celebrating its 50th anniversary season. (Coming soon: Veronica Meadows, a dark comedy that's the latest of the company's nearly 60 world premieres.)

Of course, a stay in such a design-centric hotel wouldn't be complete without a visit to the RISD Museum, less than a 15-minute walk from the Dean. The collection is dazzling in its breadth, with fashion, furniture, posters and tableware joining Roman statuary, medieval altarpieces, period rooms, Impressionist icons, modern heavies from Picasso to Rothko and contemporary acquisitions. Special exhibitions now on view include Andy Warhol's Photographs, with more than 150 Polaroid and black-and-white shots from the king of pop art, and Arlene Shechet: Meissen Recast, featuring strange porcelain specimens made with reproductions of centuries-old factory molds, like a bowl that seems to have sprouted a cherub's head and arm. Stay tuned for Graphic Design: Now in Production, opening March 28—one more good reason to visit a destination for divine design that's just a commuter rail ride away. ◆

(617-553-5900) row34.com

TIME-TRAVELING BOSTONIANS FROM 2004 would doubtless be staggered by 2014's version of the Seaport. Recalling the crumbling, vacant warehouses surrounding the then-new Boston Convention & Exhibition Center, they'd marvel at today's concentration of hotels, shiny office spaces, pricey condos and restaurants. "Wow, we can eat well on Boston Harbor now?" "Yes," you'd explain, "but you have to pick your spots. Seaport Boulevard has the views, but it's mostly chain outlets. The cool indie kids with the interesting food are a couple of blocks over in Fort Point, mostly along Congress Street." To drive that point home, you might take them to Row 34, from the veteran team behind Kenmore Square's Island Creek Oyster Bar: innovative Duxbury oyster farmer Skip Bennett, seafood master chef Jeremy Sewell and restaurateur extraordinaire Garrett Harker.

Fans of ICOB will find much that is familiar on the menu, starting with pristine Atlantic oysters ($2-$3 each) drawn from Maine to Virginia. Unimpeachably fresh, expertly handled (no trace of grit in any bivalve I ate), offering delicately unique flavors echoing distinctive home harbors and diets, these deliver a near-perfect raw-bar experience. (E for effort on the cilantro mignonette, but these specimens barely need a drib of the traditional version, and clobbering them with horseradish cocktail sauce seems criminal.) Three curls of tuna crudo ($15) reflect the decline of this overfished species; black garlic and lemon cannot hide its mushy blandness. Fluke crudo ($12) is far superior: fresh-tasting, firm and nicely punched up with pickled and fresh chilies. The smoked and cured board ($18/person) provides a convenient sample of the kitchen's flair with seafood charcuterie, like a gorgeous wedge of tilefish terrine, tiny and delectable smoked shrimp and mussels, and smokier slices of trout. Superb.

Appetizers include lettuce cups ($12), three crisply fried oysters nesting daintily on Boston lettuce with some pickled vegetables and a squiggle of aioli, like a low-carb slider. Deviled crab toast ($14) dresses a big pile of fresh crabmeat in a subtly creamy sauce with a sprinkling of smoked paprika and scant bits of celery—expect dueling forks over this dish. The shrimp slider ($4), a few fat prawns dressed in chipotle mayo and chili-spiked sweet pickles on a chewy little roll, is a delicious value, worth ordering in multiples. Clam chowder ($9) is laudable for eschewing starchy thickeners, but its heavy cream and smoky bacon overwhelm the flavor of coarsely chopped clams. That's not an issue with the excellent fried clams ($15 small, $28 large), boasting a first-rate fry job with a hint of pepper in the batter.

That deluxe treatment of shore-food classics continues with two lobster rolls ($23 each), one cold and mayo-dressed, the other warm and buttered, each a generous heap of tail and claw meat: exemplary renditions. Entrees show more refinement, as in a whole fish of the day ($25), red snapper on a recent weeknight, expertly done, moist and firm, albeit challenging for diners who fear many small bones. Requiring less care in eating is pan-roasted monkfish ($27), a brick-sized fillet again showing sure-handed cooking. The seafood-averse may happily opt for the very good bacon cheddar burger ($15) with caramelized onions, marred only by a cloying brioche bun, or the serviceable flat-iron steak ($23). Eight side dishes ($6) include skinny Old Bay-spiked onion rings that are brutally oversalted. Far better are roasted carrots with pistou and herb yogurt, and surprisingly fine broccoli with ale-spiked cheese sauce. On the teensy dessert menu, supernally creamy, luscious butterscotch pudding ($6) topped with Chantilly cream and crisped rice is the standout.

Lack of a spirits license is forgivable in light of an extraordinary list of small-producer craft beers: two dozen on tap ($6-$14), plus standard-size cans and bottles ($6-$30) and large-format bottles ($18-$85). Italy's creamy, almost briny Perle ai Porci Oyster Stout ($12) is a classic match for oysters, while sour ales like Belgium's Petrus Aged Pale ($9) stand up well to smoked and fried seafood. The wine list is similarly seafood-friendly, thoughtfully curated and refreshingly value-priced, with 13 options by the glass ($8-$13) and 44 in bottles ($25-$185), most $50 or less.

The stunning industrial-chic design, adorned with oyster-farm racks, endless rows of steel-canopied pendant lights, reclaimed wood, exposed brick and soaring ceilings, recalls the space's origins as a 19th-century steel mill, though the many hard surfaces abet an eardrum-punishing roar when the place is packed, as it frequently already is. Service upholds Harker's reputation, long burnished at Eastern Standard, for cultivating a casually hospitable staff well-versed in the intricacies of long food, beer and wine lists. Row 34 carries off its complicated dance—raw bar, clam shack, fine-dining seafood joint, beer-geek bar—with very few missteps at pretty fair prices, right where locals, tourists and conventioneers can't miss it. With just a few more like it, Boston might actually live up to its reputation as a city rich with terrific local seafood restaurants. ◆

Q: IS THERE ANYTHING I CAN DO TO ELIMINATE THE CROW'S FEET AT THE SIDE OF MY EYES?

A: Most of us will develop crow's feet lines at the outside corners of our eyes as a result of squinting our eyes in the sun or to see better. The medical term for these common wrinkles is lateral canthal lines.

Crow's feet can be removed with surgery or with laser skin resurfacing. However, many people prefer a less invasive treatment. Botox and other botulinum toxins can be injected into the area around the side of the eyes to temporarily improve or eliminate the look of moderate to severe crow's feet lines. The facial muscles that create those wrinkles are injected, causing the muscles to relax and the lines to disappear.

The effect of treatment will last three to six months, and you look younger and more rested. Of course, Botox can also be used to treat forehead lines and frown lines between your brows.

WES WORLD

MOVIE STARS ALIGN IN WES ANDERSON'S ARTFULLY ARTIFICIAL ORBIT.

THE GRAND BUDAPEST HOTEL ★★★½
Starring Ralph Fiennes, Tony Revolori, Saoirse Ronan, F. Murray Abraham, Adrien Brody, Willem Dafoe, Jeff Goldblum, Edward Norton, Tom Wilkinson, Jude Law, Harvey Keitel, Owen Wilson, Jason Schwartzman, Bill Murray and Tilda Swinton. Screenplay by Wes Anderson, based on a story by Anderson and Hugo Guinness. Directed by Wes Anderson. At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.

WHEN I FIRST VIEWED THE ONE-two punch of Rushmore and The Royal Tenenbaums back in 1998 and 2001, respectively, it felt as though these films were made just for me, a romantic who lives and breathes cinema. Of course, I wasn't alone in my admiration of Wes Anderson's pictures, handcrafted wonders that orbit around dreamers whose ambitions find them reaching beyond their lower-rung economic status, from Jason Schwartzman's Max Fischer to Owen Wilson's Eli Cash. These are people who crave family, and I've little doubt that the long-ago breakup of Anderson's parents' marriage has deeply influenced his art.

Wilson, who began his career as the co-writer of Anderson's first three films, had also played the earliest incarnation of the person who longed for more when he appeared as misguided criminal mastermind Dignan in Bottle Rocket (1996), both his and Anderson's debut. That film didn't quite contain the visual style that began taking form in Rushmore, an intentional feeling of artifice, of life in miniature, that's only grown in scale in each of Anderson's subsequent features.

But that artificiality that I once found so endearing began to congeal in pictures like The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou (2004) and The Darjeeling Limited (2007), both of which seemed to suffer without the co-authoring hand of Wilson. In fact, I was so convinced that Anderson had boxed himself into an overly precious dollhouse that I mistakenly found the stop-motion animated Fantastic Mr. Fox (2009)—his delightful adaptation of Roald Dahl's book, with its meticulously sculpted sets and puppet characters—to be the film that Anderson had spent a career building toward. This was a good thing, as far as I was concerned, since the movie was immensely enjoyable and—ironically, for a film populated by anthropomorphized animals—it contained the painfully raw humanity and real, melancholy emotion that's another hallmark of Anderson's best work.

When a film contains such ornate riches... you simply want more.

So I'm thrilled to report that the auteur's downright magical return to a live-action canvas with 2012's Moonrise Kingdom only set the stage for his latest confection. The Grand Budapest Hotel is a sprawling valentine to a place that never was, an Eastern Europe nestled between the two world wars as viewed through the prism of 16-year-old Zero Moustafa (newcomer Tony Revolori), a South Asian émigré and the newly minted lobby boy at the titular mountainside retreat. Moustafa becomes the most trusted friend and companion to M. Gustave (Ralph Fiennes, in a gloriously profane performance), the dandy, "liberally perfumed" concierge for the famed hotel, a physical creation that ranks with the Tenenbaums' townhouse as a fully realized and believably lived-in space of the imagination.

If I've taken a while to introduce the main players through dense, convoluted back story, so too does the film, which opens in the present, as a girl in a beret (Anderson does like his girls in berets) visits the run-down grave of a writer in "the former Republic of Zubrowka—once the seat of an empire." Tucked under her arm is the author's novel, The Grand Budapest Hotel.

Anderson then cuts to 1985, with the writer (Tom Wilkinson) being interviewed (really, he's addressing us directly) about the yarn we're about to see unfold, which he claims to have been told firsthand. This leads us to 1968, when the writer (now played by Jude Law) is staying at the dilapidated, Soviet-era shell of the no-longer-grand hotel as treatment for "Scribe's Fever, a form of dementia afflicting the intelligentsia of the time." It's here that the writer meets an aged Moustafa (F. Murray Abraham), who tells his tale, finally getting us to 1932, where his story encompasses the murder of a dowager, the theft of a fictional Renaissance painting, even more murders and the largest, most impressive cast you're likely to encounter in theaters all year. There are too many stars to list, but I have to note that Anderson repertory players Bob Balaban and Bill Murray have even less to do here than they did in George Clooney's The Monuments Men, which seems downright criminal.

But then, I'm greedy. When a film contains such ornate riches (it's masterfully photographed in three separate screen aspect ratios—on film!—by Anderson regular Robert D. Yeoman, scored like your childhood music box by composer Alexandre Desplat and, yes, even allowed a little animation), you simply want more. And with it coming in at a fast-paced 99 minutes, there's barely enough time to take in everything. Sure, The Grand Budapest Hotel might feel deceptively slight after the long-forgotten pleasures of a summertime romance, wistfully remembered in Moonrise Kingdom, but it's still wonderful to have Anderson back, without reservations. ◆

A MIGHTY WIND

TRIALS OF LOVE AND LYME DISEASE FUEL KYLE MORTON'S ORCHESTRAL INDIE-ROCK.

IT'S NOT UNUSUAL FOR AN INDIE-ROCK OUTFIT TO expand its membership to allow for ornate flourishes of strings, brass and coed vocals. You could start with Arcade Fire or Sufjan Stevens, examples that Typhoon's Kyle Morton took to heart in building his own band. But as a recording and touring unit of 11 members, Typhoon whips up a uniquely sizable storm.

It all began when singer/songwriter Morton and a few of his future bandmates were growing up in Salem, Ore., balancing dual musical lives in school choirs and jazz bands by day and punk groups by night.

"About the time of going to college, I had the idea to conglomerate these two things," says Morton, 28. "[Then] it started to snowball."

Typhoon eventually settled into their current lineup, which includes two drummers, two violinists and three horn players. Yet the Portland-based group doesn't sound overcrowded. "The trickiest and most rewarding part of working with the large ensemble is preserving space," Morton says. "When I write, and when we go to arrange, it's by process of subtraction. We'll try everything and then we start stripping away."

That's what often happens in the studio, the way it did with Typhoon's 2013 album White Lighter, only to be restructured for the stage. "This is so not sexy," Morton prefaces, before explaining that drummer Pieter Hilton "came up with this spreadsheet that basically had all the parts in the songs, all the members in the band, and who was playing what parts, and who conclusively had a free hand to do something." As a result, to play "Young Fathers" live, trumpeter Ryan McAlpin was free to hit snare rimshots.

"I cast myself as the main editor," says Morton, who plays guitar and keyboard. In writing, he says, "I'll have a melody and think it needs to be played by horns, or I'll get really focused on the beats. I used to play drums more. Now I have more fun kinda playing drums through our actual drummers. Once I sit down with the other people in the band, it usually gets a lot better, a lot more interesting, because that's their craft."

"Sometimes I try to do what Stephin Merritt of the Magnetic Fields does really well, pairing dark subject matter with lighter music."

What Morton may contribute most, however, are darkly abstract yet emotive lyrics. "I tend to get most of my ideas and inspirations from literature and, to some extent, from philosophy," he says. "Music being what I'm comfortable with, that's where I bring those ideas to bear."

Apart from Kafka, Nabokov and Kierkegaard, Morton drew much of his personal philosophy from a teenage battle with Lyme disease. "All the physical complications pale in comparison to how it formed my psychological perspective," says Morton, who was bitten by a tick at age 12 and underwent a kidney transplant as the illness ravaged his body. "It set off a spiral of events that would change my life, but it's all mashed in with a lot of other messy things. It's hard for me to piece out the sickness from just getting older and relationships straining."

As such, Morton's lyrics seem to make specific reference to his medical ordeal. "Common Sentiments" closes with the mantra "I will be good though my body be broken," and in "The Lake," Morton sings, "The grass grew tall where it met the lake / There was a different bug must have bit my leg, though I never saw it." Yet there's another narrative at work there. "I was in love, and this person wanted somebody else," he says, "so my sickness became wrapped up in this other love-sickness."

Ultimately, however, Morton's lyrics find uplift in the hopeful sweep of Typhoon's sparse orchestration. "Sometimes I try to do what Stephin Merritt of the Magnetic Fields does really well, pairing dark subject matter with lighter music," Morton says, though he credits his bandmates for a bigger influence.

"We keep each other going," he says. "I don't think any one of us would do this if we weren't all in. It's consolation for all the dark stuff. That's not my design, but I'm very grateful for it." ◆

SNOW MUCH FUN

AN ACUTE CASE OF CABIN FEVER.

THIS IS THE TIME OF YEAR WHEN CABIN fever can really set in. After the months of snow emergencies and parking bans and packs of bloodthirsty wolves roaming the city hunting humans, the last gasp of winter can really get you down. Fortunately, this season has allowed me to gather some advice on how to stay sane during a snow day—or several.

First, you should get some exercise, so go outside and throw snowballs at your house. Then throw snowballs at your car. If you have a boat in your driveway, climb inside and pretend you're Ernest Shackleton or the captain of a Russian nuclear icebreaker. Is that a polar bear out on the tundra? Brandish a harpoon to frighten him away! Especially because he's one of those smart polar bears who wears a U.S. Postal Service outfit and delivers your mail. Arrrr! Scared him down to the next house, we did.

Since you've got some free time, you should try some neat experiments. Like, what happens if you put shampoo on your dry hair and then stick your head under the shower? I'll tell you what: instant lather. I'm doing it this way from now on.

Did you get eggs, bread and milk before this latest storm? Good. Now you can make your famous milky bready eggs. Mmm-mmm. They're a real crowd pleaser. Remember that the recipe also calls for star anise, so if you don't have that you'll need to resort to cannibalism. If you have a dinner party, serve coffee in clear cups just to mess with everyone. Coffee in a clear cup? This guy plays by nobody's rules but his own.

You've probably got some board games, so this is the time to break them out. Then put them right back away, because you got those board games at Spencer's Gifts, and they're really not appropriate to this scenario. Why are you even having a PTA meeting right now anyway?

Assuming your power didn't get knocked out when the wolves chewed down the power lines, go on the Internet and search for last-minute travel deals. Oh, $88 to Miami! Of course, that's from Akron, so you'd need to get there first. And it's only $209 for a flight to San Diego, with an overnight layover hostage situation in Mexico City, not valid Wednesday through Monday. Book by dinnertime for travel no earlier than the next harvest moon. Tempting.

Hey, let's look at some photos from summer. They might be confusing at first, as you wonder why you wore such a strange snowsuit at the beach. Then you'll remember that those half-snowpants are called shorts and that thin little coat is called a T-shirt. You still have them somewhere, amazingly enough. Maybe you should have a theme party where guests wear such clothes ironically and laugh about how people used to really dress like that, way back when. Look at me, I'm wearing sunblock and flip-flops and listening to "Blurred Lines." Lame.

Here's another idea: Get some green spray paint, go outside and coat the snow with that lush, verdant hue you haven't seen in months. As a bonus, you'll likely have green snow for St. Patrick's Day. Then you'll become better friends with the guy next door. You think he might be Irish based on that time you got his mail, which was addressed to Seamus O'Leprechaun.

If the latest storm is exceptionally bad, you should think about helping out your neighbors. Does the old lady next door need her walkway shoveled?

By the time I stagger in, cramped, itchy and hypothermic, I really enjoy a cup of hot chocolate that much more.

After you're done thinking about that, binge-watch the entire first season of House of Cards. Then let me know how it is, because I can't get past the first couple episodes.

One upshot of cold weather is that you get to enjoy being cozy. I like to put on my favorite tuxedo, go outside and stand on one leg under a drippy gutter. By the time I stagger in, cramped, itchy and hypothermic, I really enjoy a cup of hot chocolate that much more. Another trick is to take your favorite fleece blanket, throw it in the dryer and then crawl under the kitchen table to practice air-raid drills, as cliche as that sounds.

Snow is challenging, but it can also be inspirational. Try gazing outside at the dreamy white whitescape and compose a song about it. Then name yourself MC Robert Frost Heave and release your mixtape in Sweden, where they'll listen to anything. After you're famous in Sweden, use your royalty money to buy a bus ticket to Akron, so you can take advantage of that $88 fare to Miami.

Finally, just keep on keeping on. What does that mean? I don't know because I'm suffering from snow blindness and frostbite and blood loss from the wolf attack. But spring is right around the corner, or my name isn't Seamus O'Leprechaun. ◆

BRIGHT IDEAS

THE EMMY-WINNING EXECUTIVE PRODUCER SOUNDS OFF ON HIS NEW EMERSON GIG.

Friends executive producer Kevin Bright, 59, was born and raised in New York and graduated magna cum laude from Emerson College, where he has taught since 2006. He is the founding director of Emerson's new Los Angeles Center on Sunset Boulevard, which celebrates its official opening on March 8. He began his career as a producer and director in New York and moved to Los Angeles in 1982, producing specials that starred some of the biggest names in comedy and eventually working on Dream On, In Living Color and The History of White People in America. He became one of the creators of Friends and directed more than 50 episodes, including the series finale. After its phenomenally successful 10-year run, he created the short-lived series Joey as a vehicle for Matt LeBlanc. In addition to teaching at Emerson, he created a film and television program at Perkins School for the Blind. Bright and his wife live in Brentwood, Calif., and own an apartment in Boston near Emerson.

Jonathan Soroff: So what is it about Emerson? Emerson has students who don't fit into any prescribed mold. They're all out of the box, very different and very innovative in the way they think and approach things.

If I could go to school in LA during the winter, why would I choose to be in Boston? Well, you can only go to Emerson LA for a semester, and you have to come through Boston (though there will be other programs, particularly for Los Angeles locals).

So is Fonzie going to be the dean of students? Yes, he actually arranged a second mortgage for the building and will be teaching a class in "Jumping the Shark and Avoiding Teeth."

Three favorite things about LA? The weather. Our home. And the relationship between mountains and ocean. You can go to the beach in the morning and, if you wanted to, you can be on the slopes in the afternoon.

Three favorite things about Boston? Emerson is one of them. Perkins School for the Blind is the second. And then I guess O Ya.

Speaking of Perkins, when you say you're teaching television production to the blind, do people think you're joking? [Laughs.] Yeah. Initially, they think, "That's a really dark joke for Kevin, and it sort of has no punch line." Or they think it's not actually teaching filmmaking but theory. And to that, I say, "Come see what we're doing. It's amazing."

Five most famous Emerson grads? Besides me? [Laughs.] Max Mutchnick, Jay Leno, Jennifer Coolidge, Henry Winkler, Denis Leary, Maria Menounos, Steven Wright... the list goes on and on.

Then there are the ones who didn't graduate. That's probably an even longer list.

Do you consider yourself specifically a producer of comedy? Yes, I do. I always been around comedians all my life. And even at the beginning of my career, I was moved by comedy and variety shows. I grew up on Andy Williams, Flip Wilson, Sonny and Cher.

Is your sense of humor more Borscht Belt or Caroline's Comedy Club? I think it's stuck somewhere in between. I was raised in the Borscht Belt, and I spent my college years in Caroline's.

So where do you keep your Emmys? Right now, they're in my garage in a box. They were in my apartment here, and they're going to be in my office in the LA Center. But the paint literally hadn't dried before the students arrived, so I haven't been able to move anything in permanently yet.

Cast member from Friends whose career trajectory surprises you the most? Lisa Kudrow. I never expected that she'd be a producer. She was always extremely intelligent, but I just didn't see it, and now she's an executive producer of Who Do You Think You Are? It's such an amazing idea for a show, but I really like to tell my students, "I don't have any more room in my life for drama." I would hate it if I had to go from the drama of my life and then go to work and immerse myself in more of it. But my dad was a vaudeville comedian. I've expected comedy from her. Web Therapy, too, is really innovative.

"I always like to tell my students, 'I don't have any more room in my life for drama.'"

I'm sure you're more reliable than the tabloids: Is Jennifer Aniston pregnant as we speak? She is not. I heard she was bearing Elvis' alien love child. OK, I take it back. No one can stop Elvis. Seriously, I don't think she is, despite how much the whole world wants her to be. When I see those headlines, I just feel like that's a horrible place to be. Makes me think, "I'm so happy I'm not famous."

In one sentence, what does an executive producer do? The executive producer is responsible for every single aspect of the show, creatively, financially, acting as leader of the crew, a conduit to the studio and the network. It's all-encompassing, and it doesn't matter if you're a writer/executive producer or an actor/executive producer. It's a tremendous amount of work. So it's especially tricky for actors, because if you're really fulfilling that role, you're not going to sleep much and maybe not look very good on camera.

What was the best part of doing Friends? Shooting in front of a live audience, because that's where theater and television blend. Usually, you do television in a vacuum, and you have to depend on your own instinct or the opinions of a small group of people who are heavily invested. But when you go in front of a live audience, and a joke flies, and you don't hear any laughter, you can tell yourself all you want that it's funny, but you'd better go change that joke. It's like walking a tightrope.

Worst part? The hours. Unless it's the only thing you want to do with your life, you miss out on a lot of important things. ◆

From Spain With Love

Very Fancy Footwork

WE CAN'T ALL AFFORD a jaunt to the south of Spain to escape the cold. Lucky for those grounded here in town, World Music/CRASHarts' Flamenco Festival offers the next best thing. The two-weekend festival celebrates the Spanish tradition of flamenco, a fiery fusion of folk music and dance. The first weekend features a cast of bright stars including Antonio Canales, one of Spain's foremost dancers, and an ensemble of seven musicians providing the live score. The fest continues in its second weekend with a Boston debut by Grammy-winning guitarist José Fernández Torres and his Tomatito Sextet, which will set the stage for a performance by rising flamenco dancer Paloma Fantova. Leave your passport at home and make your way to the Berklee Performance Center on March 8, 9 and 16. Hannah Weintraub

WARMED UP

The 1983 cult elassic Flashdance spawned more than a leg warmer craze. Directed and choreographed by Memphis and Jersey Boys veteran Sergio Trujillo, this musieal adaptation keeps the jazzercise spirit alive with hits from the film as well as 16 new numbers. It follows Alex, a struggling steel welder who moonlights as a club dancer but dreams of a eonservatory education and a professional dance eareer. She's played by Jillian Mueller, who, needless to say, won't be using a body double for those danee sequenees. See all those maniac moves live when the show hits the Citi Emerson Colonial Theatre March 11-23. / Ashley Rossi

DRIVE ME CRAZY In Cosmopolis, one stretch limo has enough room for Manhattan's elite—and all of their baggage. In David Cronenberg's adaptation of the mind-bending 2003 novel of the same name, Robert Pattinson plays Eric Packer, a 28-year-old billionaire whose financial empire is collapsing. Almost the entirety of the film takes place in the back seat of a white limo, which serves as the setting for business meetings, romantic affairs, a prostate exam and Packer's downward spiral. Presented in partnership with the Massachusetts School of Professional Psychology, the screening will be paired with a panel discussion that'll have local psychologists dissecting the on-screen drama. Take a ride on March 5 at the Museum of Fine Arts. / Frankie Barbato

3 DAYS TO KILL ★★ Right before CIA hit man Ethan Renner blows away a coterie of Euro goons, he's on the phone, singing "Happy Birthday" to his estranged daughter. As the call is cut short by gunfire and explosions, you half expect him to spout off bon mots like "I'm getting too old for this shit." Instead, he coughs and wheezes, and the mucus from his runny nose turns crimson as he mutters, "This cold's killin' me." Turns out, Renner's got brain cancer. "I suggest you get your affairs in order," says a helpful doc. Thus begins the latest of writer Luc Besson's Paris-set action flicks. Somewhat surprisingly, it doesn't star Liam Neeson, who, at 61, might actually be getting too old for this shit. In his place, 59-year-old Kevin Costner wryly fills the bill, getting a free pass to look winded while chasing Movie Terrorists. In a formula that's rapidly becoming rote, Besson recycles his go-to theme of balancing work with family, while director McG stages the mayhem in exactly the manner you'd expect of an adult who calls himself "McG." / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

12 YEARS A SLAVE ★★★★ Despite being adapted by screenwriter John Ridley from Solomon Northup's own 1853 memoir, the astonishing 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have seen movies about the horrors of slavery before. But this one is about the mechanics. It is about process. Director Steve McQueen actually downplays the brutality of plantation life, all things considered. 12 Years a Slave merely asks you to meet its level gaze and accept the fact that all this actually happened. Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this cruel and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? Don't look away. / Sean Burns (Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

AMERICAN HUSTLE ★ 1/2 A gaudy spectacle of egregious overacting and silly wig humor, writer-director David O. Russell's indulgent riff on the FBI's "Abscam" sting operation is 2013's biggest embarrassment. Christian Bale hems, haws and makes a lot of De Niro faces as a con-artist dry-cleaning magnate suckered by Bradley Cooper's overzealous agent into setting up a crooked New Jersey mayor (Jeremy Renner). With the overlapping narration tracks, freeze frames, classic-rock soundtrack and cascading camera moves, Russell proves that not only has he seen Goodfellas and Casino, but that he liked them an awful lot. The ins and outs of the grifts aren't particularly interesting, so American Hustle ramps up a contrived love story with Bale and Cooper bickering for the affections of Amy Adams' duplicitous bad girl, who adopts a phony British accent and refuses to wear bras. Jennifer Lawrence eats scenery as Bale's harpy wife, once again stuck in a part for which she is at least 10 years too young. Everybody's miscast and overcompensating, while Russell's directorial karaoke comes off as Scorsese for dummies. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

AUGUST: OSAGE COUNTY ★★ Playwright Tracy Letts' honored opus is a cracker Eugene O'Neill riff hopped up on prescription meds and whiskey. It crams 10 or so members of the wildly dysfunctional Weston family into a sweltering, tiny space for all sorts of simultaneous outré revelations and profane recriminations. This literal hothouse ran for more than three hours every night on Broadway to both acclaim and exhaustion. Alas, awards have a way of ruining everything, and thus a severely truncated and defanged August: Osage County is now being presented to movie audiences with an all-star cast as a collection of Academy-friendly "For Your Consideration" meltdown clips. What played as a free-for-all cacophony upon the stage is flattened out by John Wells' pedestrian direction. Almost everyone not named Meryl Streep is pretty terrific in this picture, but that hour and change shorn from Letts' original script leaves most of these performers scrambling to define their characters without the writer's ammunition. Most of this movie feels like it was left on the cutting room floor. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

HER ★★★★ We all spend too much time with our smartphones, but Joaquin Phoenix falls hard for Siri in this one-joke movie that blossoms into something of a miracle. Written and directed by Being John Malkovich and Where the Wild Things Are savant Spike Jonze, Her is a tender and ruefully funny meditation on modern relationships and what it means to love in a world where we're all in constant communication, yet seemingly lonelier than ever. The film is set in a quasi-futuristic Apple Store Los Angeles, where sentient operating systems work as personal secretaries. Samantha (voiced in an astounding performance by Scarlett Johansson) takes a shine to Phoenix's awkward, introverted Theodore, and the two develop a chemistry that's all the more remarkable because she never actually appears on screen. Her is almost overstuffed with philosophical musings on the role of technology in the way we live now. But in its big aching heart, it's a love story, and a great one. Relationships end and people grow apart, even when they live inside your phone. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

INSIDE LLEWYN DAVIS ★★★★ My favorite movie in years is the Coen brothers' most melancholic reverie, ditching their usual clockwork plotting for a loosey-goosey drift through a rotten week in the life of an itinerant troubadour skirting around the edges of the Greenwich Village scene in 1961. Oscar Isaac's Llewyn Davis is living hand-to-mouth without even a winter coat. Sharp, sour and more than a little bit of a dick, Llewyn is couch-surfing across Washington Square while pompously asserting his folk-singer superiority (Isaac strums a bunch from the Dave Van Ronk songbook, quite wonderfully). As the bleak, semi-surreal collection of anecdotes proceeds from bad to worse with the filmmakers' patented precision, the deadpan indifference of the Coens' cruel universe has never been so deeply felt, so soulfully sung or more mordantly hilarious. Bending itself into a Möbius strip of back-alley beatdowns, Inside Llewyn Davis is a movie for acerbic also-rans shat upon by life—a salute to all the people who never made it. It's a triumphant ode to failure. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square.)

Jack Ryan: Shadow Recruit ★★ Following in the undistinguished footsteps of Alec Baldwin, Harrison Ford and Ben Affleck, Chris Pine is the latest actor saddled with the thankless task of tackling Tom Clancy's tedious CIA analyst in Paramount's decades-spanning, never-say-die attempt to build a franchise around this blank-slate character. Cherry-picking stray elements of backstory scattered here and there in Clancy's novels, the film tells a purportedly "original" tale of Ryan's recruitment into the agency and his rather ludicrous attempt to stop a glowering Russian baddie (director Kenneth Branagh, hamming it up with a "keel-moose-and-squirrel" accent) from blowing up the U.S. economy. As generic as the title suggests, Shadow Recruit suffers from its modest budget and lack of immediacy, which make it feel less like a theatrical movie and more like the pilot for a CBS procedural you probably wouldn't watch. The only distinctive element is a gruff, very funny turn from Kevin Costner as Ryan's grouchy mentor. It's good to see him back in movies; too bad this was the best he could get. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Labor Day (no stars) Adapted from a Joyce Maynard novel and directed by 36-year-old Jason Reitman with a solemnity so inflated it defies all logic, common sense and presumably several of God's holy commandments, this is a spectacularly awful film. Behold the heartbreaking tale of pubescent Henry (Gattlin Griffith), stuck in a ramshackle house with his sad-sack mother Adele (Kate Winslet). Convicted murderer Josh Brolin has just escaped from a prison infirmary, seemingly waiting for a family with a hot mom who looks like Kate Winslet he can hold hostage for the holiday weekend. The courtliest kidnapper you've ever seen, Brolin immediately sets about fixing the stone work in their crumbling basement, cleans the gutters, changes the oil in the family station wagon and teaches Henry how to throw a knuckleball. It's love at first abduction, with a central erotic set piece that's a howler for the ages. A hideous harlequin romance with all the good parts cut out, Labor Day is thrillingly atrocious. I felt alive again as I left the theater. / Sean Burns (In the suburbs.)

Lone Survivor ★★ Good intentions don't always make good movies. The story goes that director Peter Berg agreed to the indignity of directing Battleship, just so long as the studio agreed to fund this bruising, bloody tribute to Navy SEALs fighting in Afghanistan. Working from Marcus Luttrell's memoir (the title of which is a huge spoiler), the film follows four guys stranded in Taliban territory, shooting it out for some 50-odd minutes of screen time in a blow-by-blow account of an operation gone wrong. Lone Survivor means well, but is unbearably dull. Mark Wahlberg, Ben Foster and Emile Hirsch strangle their wild screen personas as interchangeable embodiments of all that is stoic and decent about America. Only Berg's Friday Night Lights discovery Taylor Kitsch is allowed a personality, so of course he doesn't stick around long. The movie ignores geopolitical context in favor of long, slow-motion sequences of heroes dying noble deaths to an overwrought electric guitar score by Explosions in the Sky. By the end it feels like a recruiting ad in which everybody dies. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Nebraska ★★ Everything about Nebraska, Alexander Payne's sixth feature and first stinker, feels secondhand. It's a gimmicky sitcom script gussied up with self-consciously "artful" affectations borrowed from the New Hollywood heyday of the early '70s. Except it doesn't even get those right. The picture's entire aesthetic design comes off like a wise-ass kid dressing up in his cool uncle's old clothes and wearing them wrong. The terminally bland Will Forte stars as a stereo salesman who takes a road trip with his gruff, alcoholic father (Bruce Dern), who thinks he's won a million dollars from a Publishers Clearing House-type sweepstakes letter he recently got in the mail. There's a tension between Dern's crumbling old-school masculinity and Forte's modern-guy ineffectualness that goes maddeningly unexplored. It's just really boring and sad. The pacing is so gummed up by homages to The Last Picture Show that if you removed all the shots of deteriorating storefronts, this 115-minute film would barely be feature length. Despite the ostentatious visual scheme and constant callbacks to cinematic giants, Nebraska feels flatter than the landscapes it depicts. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Need for Speed ★ Barely 10 minutes into this adaptation of the eponymous video game, director Scott Waugh posits his cast at a drive-in theater that's showing 1968's Bullitt. And not just any scene, but Steve McQueen's famed high-speed chase through the streets of San Francisco in a modified Ford Mustang. Way to set an impossibly high bar for yourself, Waugh. Breaking Bad's Aaron Paul plays Tobey Marshall, a mechanic/street racer tapped by Dino Brewster (Dominic Cooper)—a slimeball who's also sleeping with Tobey's ex—to rebuild a mythical Shelby Mustang, which promises to pay our grease monkey protagonist enough to save the family-run garage. Sounds good, until Marshall is framed for both vehicular manslaughter and the theft of two supercars. It's more Grand Theft Auto than Need for Speed, and Paul looks so constipated behind the wheel on his revenge-fueled race across the country that it's no wonder he can't supply the film with any real gas. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Past ★★★ As you might recall from 2011's Oscar-winning A Separation, Iranian filmmaker Asghar Farhadi's family dramas unfold in a classical, patient tradition punctuated by bombshell revelations—sort of like if Ibsen or Chekhov wrote mystery novels. His latest, The Past, transplants the action to Paris, where The Artist's Bérénice Bejo awaits the arrival of her estranged husband (Ali Mosaffa). After four years of minimal contact, these two are supposed to be finally getting a divorce so she can marry her new beau (Tahar Rahim, from A Prophet). As in Farhadi's previous picture, nothing is quite as it appears on the surface. Information is parceled out gradually, so we're left to puzzle over strange emotional exchanges as a bigger, thornier picture only slowly becomes clear. There's a lot more than meets the eye in this household, too much maybe. But even as his plot teeters into melodrama, the filmmaker keeps tight control of the formal compositions and deftly underplayed performances. Expanding in scope as it goes along, the movie grows on you. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square.)

Pompeii ½ Stop me if you've heard this one before: A society girl falls for a rakish boy beneath her class, and the pair's doomed romance takes a titanic turn for the worse when disaster strikes. Ah, but this is Pompeii, circa A.D. 79, and not even volcanic lava could supply this tepid love story with any real heat. Perhaps director and Resident Evil auteur (ahem) Paul W.S. Anderson needs his muse/wife, Milla Jovovich, to keep him focused, although Lemony Snicket's Emily Browning makes for a fetching leading lady—until she's required to part her pouty lips and speak. But it's the film's hackneyed script that serves as its iceberg, with choice lines of dialogue like this one, delivered by a bored onscreen observer of gladiatorial combat: "I'm looking for something new, something fresh." So am I, brother, but it's not here. Even Game of Thrones' Kit Harington as a slave turned invincible gladiator can't help Anderson win this battle. Cue the volcano! / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Saving Mr. Banks ★½ Purporting to be the true story of how Walt Disney convinced uptight author P.L. Travers to let him adapt her precious Mary Poppins books for the big screen, Saving Mr. Banks is a steaming plate of corporate propaganda with a side of character assassination. It's also a movie about a contract negotiation, and about as interesting as that sounds. Though in real life she was reportedly a bar-crawling bisexual single mother, the film presents Travers as a miserable spinster played by a tut-tutting Emma Thompson, who seems to be channeling the host of Weakest Link. Tom Hanks' twinkly Uncle Walt not only wins her over with whimsy, but also therapeutically resolves Travers' issues about her long-dead alcoholic father (well played by Colin Farrell in flashbacks) until tears and soppy music ensue. Saving Mr. Banks advocates artists selling out to a corporation that always knows best. Hanks smuggles in a few grace notes of prickly determination in a movie that's otherwise an infomercial for the company that produced it. / Sean Burns (At West Newton.)

Tim's Vermeer ★★½ Magicians Penn and Teller have spent a career playfully twisting and debunking aspects of their act, in recent years taking a similar approach to the wider culture as well, à la their pointedly titled television show Bullshit!. This initially engrossing but ultimately thin documentary, directed by Teller, may have been better suited for a TV segment. The Tim of the title is Tim Jenison, an inventor and tech whiz who made millions in the video industry. Obsessed with the idea that Dutch master Johannes Vermeer was using optics to create his unparalleled portraits, Tim rigs up a mirrored contraption based on 17th-century camera obscura equipment and sets about painting his own replica of The Music Lesson. Like most Penn and Teller projects, Tim's Vermeer shows you the trickery behind the trick and leaves you astounded all the same. There are some fascinating ideas here about the arbitrary line drawn by historians between invention and artistry, but even at 80 minutes the film feels distended and dragged out. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square.)

The Wind Rises ★★★½ Master animator Hayao Miyazaki has announced this will be his final film, and it's quite the departure from his fantasy tales. A relatively straightforward biopic of aeronautical engineer Jiro Horikoshi, The Wind Rises doubles as a lyrical, doom-laden portrait of a country on the precipice of disaster, and a sad meditation on the role of an artist during wartime. Nearsighted Jiro is obsessed with aviation but unfit to fly, channeling his passion into designing planes. As Japan gears up for World War II, the movie sinks into a melancholy groove, admiring Jiro's spirited innovations while dreading the inevitable outcome. It works in a slower, sadder register than most contemporary pictures, dwelling on small moments of beauty with an apocalypse on the horizon. As with most Miyazaki movies, Disney has prepared an English language dub for American theaters. I'm not sure it was necessary this time, as this mournful tale is decidedly not for children. The dubbed version does, however, boast Werner Herzog as a sly, mysterious German, so kudos on the voice casting. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square.)

Winter's Tale ★ The darndest barrel of nonsense to hit screens in quite some time, hack screenwriter Akiva Goldsman's directorial debut is a goofy, unintentionally hilarious take on Mark Helprin's novel. Colin Farrell stars as a dashing burglar with a heart of gold, falling madly in love with a young heiress dying of consumption, and they both end up flying on a winged pegasus through turn-of-the-century New York City. Farrell's on the run from Russell Crowe's scar-faced mob boss, who speaks in a comical Lucky Charms Irish accent and also happens to be an ancient demon. There's much ado about prophesies and miracles, as characters run around frantically trying to explain the mumbo-jumbo rules of this fantasy universe to one another—and all that's before the story leaps ahead a century, when Farrell emerges from the East River with no memory and we have to start all over again. By the time an unbilled superstar randomly shows up as Satan, I was convinced I'd fallen asleep in the theater and was having the strangest dream. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Wolf of Wall Street ★★★★ An obscenity, an abomination and the movie this country deserves right now. Martin Scorsese's epic assault on propriety and good taste stars Leonardo DiCaprio as stockbroker scumbag Jordan Belfort, one of the countless who looted the American Dream and gagged on the spoils of wretched excess. It's another Scorsese gangster picture, only this time it's white-collar and played out as a broad, bilious farce. Pumped up with adrenaline and cocaine, the picture blasts off like a rocket ship into such a frenzied orgy of sex, drugs and decadence that both Hunter S. Thompson and Federico Fellini might consider it a bit much. The Wolf of Wall Street zings at warp speed from one fiendishly entertaining, appalling set piece to another, until the movie's gargantuan three-hour running time reveals Scorsese's moral severity. It's all too much too-much-ness about people for whom too much was never enough. The grotesque excess becomes deadening and the emptiness chilling. DiCaprio is fearlessly smarmy, Jonah Hill makes a revolting sidekick, and they heroically debase themselves in the funniest, angriest movie of the year. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

TOY STORY When Ron Gallo was told he looked like the subject of Antonio Mancini's painting Boy with Toy Soldiers, the name stuck. But his band Toy Soldiers aren't playing around: Since forming in 2007, they've marched their way to the stages of South by Southwest and made USA Today's list of "Top Bands to Watch" with their soulful lyrics and bluesy sound. The quintet worked with Philadelphia producer Bill Moriarty (responsible for Dr. Dog's past four records) on their sophomore album, The Maybe Boys, released late last year, to capture the energy of their rambunctious live shows. Experience it for yourself and join forces with Toy Soldiers on March 13 at the Sinclair. / Hannah Weintraub PHOTO: DAVE HERRON at Hotel Manger, one of Boston's most happening hotspots in the 1930s. Later renamed the Hotel Madison, the ultra-modern "Tower of Hospitality" was located next to the old Boston Garden and entertained sports stars, politicians and musicians sueh as the Beatles for decades. Then in 1983, the Hotel Madison was demolished to make way for the Tip O'Neill Federal Building. But history buffs can still cheek into the historie hotel through March 22—and see a series of photographs documenting its demise—at the West End Museum's Relies of a Bygone Era, which features original postcards, pamphlets, photographs and pieces of the demolished building. / Elissa Bernstein

DRESSED TO THRILL

They might be ladies who lunch, but they were all business when it came to helping women transition back into the workforce at the annual Dress for Success luncheon, held at the InterContinental Boston.

Among the high-powered women (and a sprinkling of men) on hand were former first lady Angela Menino and professor Tom, Channel 5 honorees Karen Holmes Ward, Susan Wornick, Shayna Seymour and Kimberly Bookman with station GM Bill Fine and his gorgeous wife, Gail, the soignée Jacqui Budd and her other half, Wayne, retail fairy godmother Annette Goubeaux, marketing guru Joan Jolley, board member Denise Leyhe, bootlegger Catherine Stanton Schiff, the incomparable Joanne Jaxtimer, fashion plate Bennie Wiley and her legal eagle husband, Flash, media magnate Julie Kahn, disarmingly charming Brit Mathew Westcott and one woman wearing a gorgeous suit who said, "Want to know my dirty little fashion secret? QVC."

Lunch was delicious and the speaking program blessedly brief. Even the live auction, which raised beaucoup dinero, was over before the coffee was cold, and everyone was out of there precisely on time—a welcome rarity on the charity circuit.

Meanwhile, the award for the snarkiest remark went to the person who inspected another guest in an outfit that was somewhat revealing for daytime and said, "She must have misread the invitation to say 'Dress for some sex.'"

SHAKE YOUR MONEY MAKER

The most aptly named party on Boston's social calendar is Big Night—the annual fundraiser that never fails to raise the roof—at the House of Blues.

A benefit for Big Brothers Big Sisters of Massachusetts Bay, the evening features free-flowing booze and delicious comfort food (lobster mac 'n' cheese and short rib sliders, anyone?), but the highlight is undeniably the chart-topping musical acts, this year the Black Crowes and Fitz and the Tantrums.

Prominent among the throng: event chair Tim Dibble, honoree Sandy Edgerley, mega-philanthropists Jonathan and Patti Kraft, the beautiful blond hat trick of Christine Meara, Charity McCourt and Liza Brett, with their other halves, Billy, Ryan and Timmy, dazzling emcee Bianca de la Garza, fashionista Elisha Daniels, real estate titan Frank Petz and the flawless Abbie, the entire Fabian clan—Nancy, Sarah, Richard and Edward—with the ever-dapper Peter Monaco, and one man who said, "I need to find a gay guy who can dress me every morning but doesn't expect me to put out."

Both bands were worth the price of admission, and even normally subdued fund managers and VC titans let down their hair and loosened the purse strings. In fact, the evening's only downside was the overzealous busboys who whisked away cocktails immediately after they were put down on a table, necessitating endless trips to the bar (that's my story, and I'm sticking to it).

The evening's choicest comment came during the live auction, when someone said, "A trip to Dubai is the prize? I'd pay never to have to go there again."

WHERE'S LENA DUNHAM WHEN YOU NEED HER?

It was an intimidatingly hip guest list when design gurus Cheryl and Jeffrey Katz hosted a party for marketing maven and art photographer Mike Toth (aka the man who invented J.Crew) at their South Boston studio, to celebrate Toth's new book and exhibit US. American Stories.

A fundraiser for Mass. Eye and Ear, the afternoon attracted the likes of uber-chef Ana Sortun (who did the catering) and her colleague John daSilva, his unfailingly hospitable wife, Molly Loveday, Somervillians Geoff and Patricia Hargadon, radio eminence Margery Eagan, Cambridge chatelaine Jan Saragoni, publishing bigwig Mitch Fox, Sperry Top-Sider VP Bradley O'Brien, brunette beauty Serena Saitas, smoking-hot mixologist Vikram Hegde, Sports Illustrated scribe E.M. Swift, Marc Jacobs design director Aude Tabet, filmmaker DeMane Davis, shelter-mag stud-muffin Kyle Hoepner and others of an equally artsy ilk.

As one guest put it: "If I'd known what this party was going to be like, I would have dressed way more Brooklyn." ◆

ART FROM SCRATCH

PICASSO TOLD US THAT "THE PURPOSE of art is washing the dust of daily life off our souls." And as this issue makes clear, we've got amazing opportunities for that sort of spring cleaning ahead. Say, a production that allows its deaf-blind cast to not only communicate with an audience, but captivate it. (Hear from its director in Alexandra Cavallo's feature, which taps crew and cast members for insights into a host of hot-ticket shows.) Or a spectacle that'll have 150 Bostonians from all walks of life moving in unison, smack in the middle of Copley Square. (You'll find deets on that in Jonathan Soroff's survey of the season's dance highlights.) Or a new gallery that's making its debut with a show featuring street art from around the world. (That's in my preview of exciting exhibits—which, speaking of the dust of daily life, also happens to include an artist who uses "blood dust" as a medium.)

Elsewhere, Soroff interviews our cover subject, Scandal star Kate Burton, who's returned to the Huntington stage to appear in The Seagull opposite her son (who, in fact, plays her son—meta!). Meanwhile, Sarah Hagman catches up with a concertmaster whose passion for centuries-old music is as bright as her flaming-red 'do. And I check in with a 23-year-old who's heading up not one, not two, not three, but four theater programs, bringing premiere readings of foreign dramas to Boston. Feel like a slacker after reading that? Take heart: As I've found this issue, there's nothing like a good dusting to uncover some much-needed inspiration.

VIOLINIST AISSLINN NOSKY TAKES CENTER STAGE AT H+H »»

Well Played

Handel + Haydn violinist Aisslinn Nosky is a master of her trade, a concertmaster, to be precise. The title, from the German word "Kapellmeister," is one composers like Bach and Haydn once held. It's a role that not only requires expertise in the violin—which she's played since age 3—but also in tuning the orchestra and marking sheet music. "It's a little bit like I'm a middle manager, a bridge between the rest of the string players and the conductor," she explains.

On April 4 (Jordan Hall) and April 6 (Sanders Theatre), she'll take on another role, leading her Handel + Haydn peers in Mendelssohn's Library without artistic director Harry Christophers at the helm. But as Nosky notes, "Having a conductor in front of an orchestra really didn't start to become a standard affair until the late-18th and, actually, well into the 19th centuries." She proposed the program to highlight some of the German composer's lesser-known works, as well as music that inspired him. Mendelssohn was an avid collector of autographed works by composers such as Mozart, Handel and Vivaldi—unusual at the time—and Nosky says these influences can be heard in his music.

On stage, she'll be joined by associate concertmaster Christina Day Martinson and assistant concertmaster Susanna Ogata. The three women hold the top orchestral positions—a rare occurrence. "I think we are, in one sense, blind to the gender issue because we're trying to make decisions based on what's really good for the art," Nosky says.

Also unique is the baroque group's staying power: Next year, it celebrates its bicentennial. Nosky, who joined H+H in 2011, is happy to help keep its tradition alive. "Knowing there's that history behind us gives me confidence, but it's also very humbling," she says. "We have a huge responsibility to do whatever...it takes to get this wonderful music out to people for the next 200 years." / Sarah Hagman

PERFECT PAIR

TWO VETS FIND THE RIGHT SPACE.

The closing of Chez Henri last year left a void in the area between Harvard and Porter Squares, but chef Susan Regis and baker René Becker are teaming up to fill that space soon with their new restaurant.

"All systems are go," says Regis, who predicts a late summer opening. "In August, you can work out kinks, and in September, forge ahead."

Neither Regis (most recently at the now-shuttered UpStairs on the Square) nor Becker (Hi-Rise Bread Company) is willing to go into too much detail about the project, which is still in the planning stages. "Most people have a business plan, investors, ideas worked out in their heads, and then they look for a space," Becker says. "We basically just said, 'Hey, let's do this!'"

"FORGE AHEAD": Susan Regis plans to open a restaurant with René Becker.

"It's such a nice, engaging space," Regis adds. "[We] plan to reinvigorate, recreate, open up the space, bring in some light."

As for the menu, expect it to be small and neighborhood-oriented. Says Regis: "That's the appeal for myself and René. Everyone has a story about Chez Henri or Chez Jean [its predecessor]. My brother got engaged there."

There's also an appeal in the partnership between the two. "Susan's the best cook I know," Becker declares. "This is a really great treat to be working with her. She has really great taste, and that extends to furniture and art."

Says Regis: "It's nice not to have to worry about the bread in a restaurant! René is a great cook and a wine geek." (Years ago, Becker wrote about the food and wine scene.)

As for the probable name of the forthcoming eatery, here are a few hints: It may allude to the use of "lots of wood" in the interior design, and it's a playful take on the pair's foray into opening a new restaurant.

Sweet Lee!

Chocolatier Lee Napoli is back at the South End's ChocoLee after serving as a consulting chef at the North End's Bread and Butter cafe. With Easter coming in April, it's never too early to stock up on her delectable chocolate bunnies, but a new creation—a marzipan-stuffed whole fig encased in a chocolate pouch—is already creating some buzz.

HOLY SMOKES! Yakitori in smoke comes served in a Mason jar at Wink & Nod.

Wink & Nod 3 Appleton St., Boston, winkandnod.com

First Taste / Matt Martinelli

GETTIN' A NOD

WHISK IS A SPEAKEASY'S FINAL INGREDIENT.

THE SOUTH END'S NEW WINK & NOD IS based on a speakeasy concept. That might lead some people to believe that unveiling Whisk's involvement in the kitchen mere days before opening was a hush-hush stunt. Those people would be wrong.

It was born out of necessity, according to Curtis McMillan, general manager of Wink & Nod, the new spot from Boston Nightlife Ventures on Appleton Street.

"We had previously hired a group, a private entity, to help with the food," McMillan says. "The first time I tasted the food, I wanted to kill myself. I said there's no way this kitchen is going to work with my beverage program."

Wink & Nod was slated to open in mid-March, so he had to quickly find a replacement. In February, McMillan reached out to Jeremy Kean and Philip Kruta of Whisk. The pair had just finished a well-received pop-up that lasted a few months in the North End, so they were looking for a new home. The timing wasn't the only thing that matched up well.

The creativity that McMillan strives for in his cocktail program mirrored what Kean and Kruta were producing, even when they first started out with a small menu at a cafe. At Wink & Nod, they'll offer some dishes familiar from their pop-ups (all in the vogue shareable style), including black pasta with miso, cauliflower and baby octopus. They'll also serve new items such as quail yakitori in a cherrywood-smoke-filled Mason jar, as well as a made-to-order fresh Twinkie. Many of the à la carte items will change seasonally, and starting in mid-April, the Whisk team will make a tasting menu for 30-40 seats each night. That's where McMillan's cocktail program will get a chance to shine. In addition to wine pairings, there will be Scotch pairings for the food.

"As long as there's been wine, somebody's always said, 'Oh, this goes good with cheese.' Scotch has not had that kind of love," he says.

The focus of McMillan's post-Prohibition-style bar program will be on Scotch cocktails, as well as on rum and Tiki cocktails. One eye-catcher on the drink menu will be the Billionaire Bijou. Priced at $100, it mixes Nolet's reserve gin ($700 a bottle), Chartreuse VEP ($200 a bottle), Martini & Rossi Gran Lusso 150th anniversary sweet vermouth and a saffron-infused French orange bitters ($500 a bottle). So, who might break the bank for a saffron-coated mouth?

"We may get one or two people who up the ante with their friends, and I end up serving a couple of them," McMillan says. "Or Goldman Sachs could rent the place out for a day, and I'd serve 1,000 of them."

LOOK AT THIS GUY

Emerson grad Joe Mande—the dude behind the Tumblr-turned-book Look at This F---ing Hipster*—drops by Great Scott on March 28 to get some IRL laughs.*

DO YOU THINK YOU'RE PROBABLY ONE OF EMERSON'S MOST FAMOUS GRADUATES, JUST ABOVE JAY LENO AND JUST BELOW THE FONZ? [Laughs] Yeah, Harris Wittels and I are probably the most famous 21st-century graduates.

DO YOU EVER LOOK BACK AND REGRET CONTRIBUTING TO THE "HIPSTER" PHENOMENON? I've definitely moved on, and I'm not totally proud of it, but I wouldn't say I'm ashamed of it. I got a book deal out of it that paid for me to live in New York for a year and not have a job, so that was totally worth it. I was just recently in San Francisco, and a guy came up to me after my show with my book. I thought he wanted me to sign it, and then he opened it up to the page that he was in and signed it and gave it to me. And the whole time I was like, are you going to punch me in the face? It seemed very elaborate, like he'd been dreaming about my book and punching me in the face.

IT ALLOWED YOU TO LIVE IN NEW YORK WITHOUT A JOB. SO, IT ALLOWED YOU TO LIVE LIKE... A F---ING HIPSTER? Oh, for sure. I wrote the whole book in a coffee shop on Havemeyer [Street] in Williamsburg. I was aware of the irony.

AND YOU LEFT THE COFFEE SHOP AND HOPPED ON YOUR FIXED-GEAR BIKE. Yes. Put pomade in my mustache and drove home.

THERE ARE A LOT OF COMEDY CREWS: THE SNL CREW, THE JUDD APATOW GUYS, AND YOU HAVE YOUR CREW—NICK KROLL AND JOHN MULANEY, ETC. IF YOU GUYS ALL MET IN A TURF WAR, LIKE THE BATTLE BETWEEN THE NEWS TEAMS IN ANCHORMAN, WHO WOULD WIN? I feel like the SNL people run pretty deep—and they're loyal. And all the writers there are amazing, and they would join in. You know, I don't know what my crew would even be called. / Alexandra Cavallo

Good Eats: Good to be Kling

Even before you've taken a bite, you'll know you've gotten Kua Kling from Allston's S&I To Go. A southern Thai specialty that stands out among a collection of hard-to-find dishes on the hole-in-the-wall's new menu, this dry curry announces itself with wok smoke and aromas of spice and chilies. Not surprisingly, that first bite will jolt the palate: The finely minced pork, which thoroughly absorbs the curry paste, gives back a rich heat that keeps building, along with a faint sweetness and an unmistakable floral tang from the kaffir lime leaves sprinkled on top. / Elizabeth Bomze

Point, Blancs

After years of being a deep underground favorite, chenin blanc is finally emerging. Because the grape's never been fashionable, most producers who remain in the game appear serious and committed to quality—so you're almost guaranteed to get a delicious (and affordable) white wine. The only issue is style. Like that other chameleon, riesling, chenin goes from bone dry to very sweet, with every shade in between. In its Loire Valley homeland, the most famous chenin originates in the commune of Vouvray; it often features some residual sugar, and if it's designated as demi-sec or tendre, you will taste sweetness along with the fruit and tart acids. If it's from Savennieres, it will be bone dry. The South African examples are usually dry and softer in texture, with less mineral notes, while California producers are mostly churning out dry chenins. If you're new to chenin and want to find out what it's all about, you'll enjoy these three very different wines. / Sandy Block

KEN FORRESTER VINEYARDS "OLD VINE RESERVE" CHENIN BLANC, STELLENBOSCH, 2012 A favorite I've tracked over several vintages, it's never disappointing in the mellower, rounder dry style. This is a gently textured wine with apricot and nectarine fruit, dry and apple-like on the finish. It's got some lovely baking spice and earthy notes that make it an outstanding match for a wide variety of flavorful seafood dishes.
$17, Morty's Fine Wines, Newton

DOMAINE DES BAUMARD, SAVENNIÈRES, LOIRE VALLEY, 2009 This estate wine is situated behind cliffs that drop steeply to the Loire River; its chenin vines are planted on rocky southeast-facing slopes, which keep yields low. Its pear-blossom aromas and signature herb and lemon flavors are piercing. This vintage features a bit more body than most, but it is dry, lingering and an appetizing match for seared sea scallops.
$25, Brookline Liquor Mort, Brookline

CHAPPELLET CHENIN BLANC, NAPA VALLEY, 2011 The story of chenin blanc's reversal of fortune is best highlighted at this California vineyard. About a decade ago, the Chappellet family had some great old-vine chenin planted on their Pritchard Hill estate that they decided to rip out because there was no market for the grape, and red wines were in such high demand. Today, it's a different tune, but the style is the same as in the past: rich, toasty, pear-like, dry and lush, with honeysuckle notes and a stone fruit finish. It's ideal for the chardonnay drinker looking to branch out.

COLD MOVE IS NOT SO HOT

TO THE MEANIE WHO STOLE MY COAT: Yes, I should have checked it. Yes, it was naive of me to leave it at an empty table. But that does not make you stealing my winter coat, gloves and scarf any less cruel! My (rather cute) coat may be keeping you warm, but your heart will always be cold.

TO EVERYONE GETTING ON THE INBOUND TRAIN AT ARLINGTON: What's up with the cluster of fools at the bottom of the stairs every single day? And why is it that you all feel compelled to cram yourselves through the smallest door on the train rather than, I don't know, do something crazy like spread out and use all the doors? While it's fascinating to watch this curious display of group dynamics, I'm much more interested in making it to Park Street to catch my train on time. Spread out!

Tight on the T

TO THE FOUR STRANGERS IN THE SOUTH END WHO TOOK CARE OF MY MOM: Thank you. When my mom tripped on a curb and fell, breaking her arm, she was stunned by the shock and the pain. I want to say thank you to the man who came over and sat with her until she was able to get up. After she sent you on your way because she thought she was OK, she made it only half a block before she became too dizzy to walk. I want to say thanks to the three strangers who came over to help her as she sank onto a nearby bench. You had to be exhausted from the Mass. General Run of Hope, and yet you stayed with her, refusing to leave her until you knew she was OK. When you couldn't find a cab for her, you called the car service you use for work and paid for the car with your own credit card. You waited with her until the car arrived, so that all she had to do was climb in and ride back home so she could call me. She cried when she told me what you did for her. She needed angels that day, and she found them. Thank you for making the world a better place.

ON THE MAP

All the world's a stage, but American stages aren't always so worldly. "If [plays] are foreign, they're maybe British or Irish—and they present Molière once in a while," says Guy Ben-Aharon, 23. "Imagine how much more we'd understand what's going on in Syria if we saw Syrian plays. They wouldn't be just an image on CNN."

It's in that spirit that he founded Israeli Stage, German Stage, Swiss Stage and (whew!) the forthcoming French Stage. He started with scripts from his native Israel, organizing his first staged reading in 2010 as an Emerson undergrad. Israeli Stage has since presented 14 plays by nine scribes, fostering dialogue with post-show talkbacks, tours to college campuses (15 and counting) and diverse programming, with "narratives about Israeli Arabs, the Orthodox community in Israel, the Sephardic community in Israel," Ben-Aharon says. "If it has strong emotional life, and it's culturally specific but universally themed, it'll be on our stages."

One rapt audience member was Goethe-Institut director Detlef Gericke-Schönhagen. After seeing The Banality of Love, about the philosophers Martin Heidegger and Hannah Arendt, he tapped Ben-Aharon to create a similar program for the Goethe-Institut. Guten tag, German Stage. Swissnex Boston followed suit, and now Ben-Aharon is working with the French Cultural Center on French Stage.

He's not stopping there. Next year will see Israeli Stage's first full-scale productions. And this month marks its most ambitious program yet: a two-week residency with Israeli playwright Savyon Liebrecht, who'll give lectures and workshop two plays, Freud's Women and Dear Sigmund and Carl, with free world premiere readings staged at Babson, Brandeis and BU. Ben-Aharon relishes the chance to bring such works to students—and cultivate a new generation of theater buffs. "I go to the theater, and I'm often the youngest person," he says. "It's selfish. I want to work in theater for the next 50 years." / Jacqueline Houton

THE DEPTHS OF GRIEF

A FAMILY REELS FROM A DAUGHTER'S SUICIDE.

The Why of Things* by Elizabeth Hartley Winthrop
Published Simon & Schuster, 320 pages, $25
This novel is set on the North Shore, and the author lives in Massachusetts.

WATER—BEAUTIFUL, DANGEROUS, mysterious and dark—is a central theme and image in this novel, the third by Elizabeth Hartley Winthrop. The Jacobs family has come to Cape Ann for the summer, nine months after the suicide of 17-year-old Sophie. They know the fatal deed involved a car and a railroad train, but Sophie left no clue to her motive. Now, the water-filled quarry next to their summer house has become the eerie scene of yet another death, that of a man whose truck plunged into its depths.

To distract herself from the sorrow of her sister's death, Eve becomes a detective, investigating who died and why. An accident? Murder? Or maybe it's that other too-familiar and terrible goodbye. The police seem uninterested. Her parents, Joan and Anders, are numb, almost surprisingly detached in Winthrop's rendering, though the grisly scene of workmen extracting the drowned man and his truck evokes a kind of horror and metaphorical energy: Here's someone else's child, dead. They learn he is a local. Joan makes oblique contact with his mother, but they never bond over their shared tragedy. Anders channels his grief into the water, learning to scuba dive and embracing its magical remove from ordinary life. It's as if he's transformed the quarry's dangerous water into a thing of beauty. And though Winthrop may sometimes leave you wanting more, her understated style echoes that sense of deep-welled grace.

FROM PAGE 9: Joan had counted on watching as graduation caps filled the air, so many black shapes against the sky. There are many things that she hadn't realized she was vaguely counting on; she has gone through the months since with the sense that she took a wrong turn somewhere, or that in some parallel universe another version of herself is leading the life she had expected. ◆

SAVANNAH NIGHTS

CITY LIVING MEETS LAID-BACK SOUTHERN CHARM.

THREE YEARS INTO THE CIVIL WAR, Gen. Sherman embarked on a vicious 1,000-mile march across the South. Hoping to hasten the Union's victory, he and 67,000 men destroyed barns, livestock, railroads and anything else in their path to devastate the Confederacy's economy and morale. Luckily for us, a peaceful surrender was negotiated in Savannah, which Sherman presented to President Lincoln as a Christmas gift. Without the sudden onset of Southern hospitality, the world may never have enjoyed Savannahian Juliette Gordon Low's Girl Scout cookies. It's a gift that keeps on giving.

Only two-and-a-half square miles and divided into 22 grids, Savannah's historic district is pedestrian-friendly—drivers happily stop to let passers-by cross the street—and easy to navigate. That's what Gen. Oglethorpe had in mind when he founded the 13th colony in 1733. The general is cast in bronze in Chippewa Square, where Forrest Gump shared stories and his box of chocolates with strangers. It's also the usual starting point for Jonathan Stalcup's Architectural Savannah tour, a 90-minute walk showcasing the city's nearly 300-year history and the evolution of architectural styles, from colonial to Victorian to art deco. One highlight is the Owens-Thomas House, with its original carriage house and intact slave quarters. The 1816 building is one of the first U.S. private residences built by a professionally trained architect, William Jay, and, with its attention to symmetry and neo-classical details, it's considered a prime example of Regency-era architecture.

Two squares away, Jay also built the Telfair Mansion—now the oldest museum in the South—where visitors can view period rooms, sculptures and paintings. There's no shortage of art in Savannah, and plenty of respect for preserving the past, but the city also maintains an appreciation for modern work. On the adjacent corner, the Jepson Center houses contemporary artists like Roy Lichtenstein and Jeff Koons, and the Savannah College of Art and Design has eight galleries featuring students' work.

If walking becomes tiresome, there's a free trolley service throughout the city, but guests at the Bohemian can also admire masterpieces from the comfort of their own bed. The boutique hotel displays original artwork and feels like a museum, down to the curated soundtrack that greets guests in the lobby and their rooms. Its sleek dark wood, exposed brick and campaign furniture add to its polished and relaxed vibe.

Of course, it wouldn't be a trip to the South without indulging in some Lowcountry fare. The Bohemian's Rocks on the River restaurant features a classic she-crab bisque. Just a short walk away, local favorite B. Matthews has plenty of brunch items, including eggs Benedict with crab and a side of house-made biscuits, while nearby Walls' BBQ offers the requisite barbecue fare. Tucked into an alley, the soul food joint may be tricky to find, but the ribs and collard greens are well worth the hunt. The ambiance is humble, with plastic foam cups and menu items spelled out with letter magnets, but one bite will show why it has been an institution for 50 years.

For liquid meals, sample Moon River Brewing Company's drafts in the beer garden, and get your sugar fix with pecan pralines at Savannah's Candy Kitchen. Then take a Spanish moss-shaded stroll through City Market. The open-air courtyard is full of artisans' shops, entertainment spots and plenty of places to grab a cocktail—but don't worry about rushing to finish drinks to catch dinner reservations. While in the historic district, patrons can ask for a to-go cup à la New Orleans—one of seven U.S. cities that allows public drinking—and sip at leisure on the way to Garibaldi's. The former firehouse turned social club's crispy flounder dish has become the stuff of legend during the past 30 years.

Before turning in for the night, head back to the Bohemian's Rocks on the Roof. Locals flock to the rooftop for its lounge atmosphere and live music. Oyster shell lampshades and an upturned kayak frame the square bar, where you can saddle up to savor tapas-style items and a seasonal drink menu. Step onto the outside patio for a look at the Talmadge Memorial Bridge that heads north to South Carolina. There's a spectacular view of the Savannah River that can be enjoyed fireside. That being said, the city's annual average temperature is a balmy 77 degrees. And for Bostonians, there's not much more convincing needed for a long-weekend getaway. ◆

1 Charles St. South, Boston (617-421-1200)
ostraboston.com

FOR A TOWN THAT PRIDES ITSELF ON ITS maritime roots, it's shocking how long it took for posh seafood to hit Boston. For decades, clam shacks and old-school hangouts slinging lobster rolls reigned; save for a few choice oyster bars like Neptune and B&G, Legal Sea Foods and Atlantic Fish Co. were the only places you could find great fish and a respectable wine list.

It's a whole new era. During the past five years, our upscalc seafood offerings have more than doubled, from Legal's elegant Harborside dining room to oyster-bars-and-more like Kenmore Square's Island Creek and Fort Point's Row 34. Now we have Ostra, which chef-owner Jamie Mammano and his Columbus Hospitality Group opened in the former Avila space in late November.

Just as its siblings Mistral, Sorellina and Mooo offer glamorous takes on French bistro, Italian and steakhouse fare, respectivcly, Ostra presents seafood with designer flourishes. Sophisticated and sexy, the restaurant's decor makes subtle nods to the Mediterranean: pure white walls, over-scaled black-and-white images of sand and rock, and translucent jellyfish-esque pendants dangling from the soaring ceilings. Mosaic patterns and a hand-painted mural—two design elements that go wrong in so, so many restaurants—dazzle in the entry and bar, where the tinkling of a jazz pianist makes you wish live music was more commonplace in our restaurant scene. The daily catch is proudly displayed under a bright light, the bass and monkfish glistening on a stage of pebbled ice.

The cuisine, too, rakes in the presentation points. A stunning horseshoe crab-emblazoned charger greets you at the table, only to be whisked away as your bread arrives. That bread is a gorgeous, warm ciabatta-like mini loaf covered with crisp, paper-thin slices of potato and onion; it's accompanied by an herb-topped dollop of soft butter in a pool of olive oil. Some entrees arrive in dramatic fashion, in huge-handled skillets or plated under a silvery dome. In case the prices—$18 and up for raw appetizers, including a $160 Israeli osetra caviar, and a $40-something average for entrees—didn't make the point, these touches tell you that you're dining with a capital D.

Executive chef Mitchell Randall hails from Scarborough, Maine, and his adoration of great seafood shows. A cylinder of sea bass tartare with truffle aioli ($24) is blanketed with shavings of winter black truffles and served with fennel pollen crostini. The clear, delicate truffle flavor doesn't mask the flavor of the fish, which is perfectly chopped to showcase the natural texture of the bass. Truffles also star in a starter of ricotta gnocchetti ($24), where sweet, generously sized lumps of Maine lobster mingle with pleasantly chewy little dumplings and beech mushrooms in a velvcty black truffle sauce.

A pan of paella ($44) overflows with the fruits of the sea: lobster, shrimp, mussels, clams, calamari and octopus, all infused with a fragrant saffron aroma. Grilled sea bream ($42) is a deceptively simple preparation, completely deboned and wrapped in trevisano (a longer-leafed radicchio). It's hit with a bit of lemon, herbs and olive oil, leaving the emphasis squarely on the moist and tender fish.

Even non-seafood ingredients excel. Giannone Farms roast chicken with roasted winter vegetables ($28) is crisp and satisfying. Lamb osso bucco with tomato, artichokes and creamy polenta ($36) has incredible richness and roasted tomato flavor.

But much depends on the kitchen's pace and your evening's server, who can range from confident and informed to reserved or a bit hard to track down. When halibut ($38) arrives after some delay, it's on a scorching-hot plate and dry, with mushrooms and a potato puree that want for seasoning. When we request a by-the-glass wine recommendation, we're offered chardonnay or sauvignon blanc, without winemaker or context.

Finish on a high note by ordering dessert. No one should miss the Snow Egg ($11), an oval puff of lemon mousse-filled meringue served with fresh raspberries and basil syrup and crowned with a nest of spun sugar. And any Nutella lover would fall for the chocolate hazelnut cremeux ($13), an intense ganache-like brick paired with popcorn-flavored ice cream and a swoop of Pop Rocks-embedded chocolate.

Both plates wow you with good looks, then deliver surprising depth. That's true of much of what you'll find at Ostra. It may need time to shake out a few new-restaurant wrinkles, but this debut's stylish approach to seafood is one that's long been overdue. ◆

Q: MY FACE HAS BECOME THINNER AS I GET OLDER AND MY SKIN IS GETTING LOOSER AND I'M ALSO STARTING TO DEVELOP JOWLS. CAN I DO SOMETHING OTHER THAN HAVE SURGERY?

A: As we age our upper face loses volume, which leads to loose and sagging skin in the lower part of the face, as well as flattened cheeks.

The best way to regain a more youthful appearance is to replace volume along the cheekbones and upper face. That gives more definition and curvature to the upper cheek area. At the same time the increased volume visibly lifts the lower face.

The FDA recently approved a new filler for just that purpose: Juvederm Voluma. It is a safe and effective hyaluronic filler that is injected into the upper face. It gives an immediate lift and lasts up to two years.

Voluma is very natural looking and is a great way for men and women to instantly look a few years younger.

BATE AND SWITCH

JASON BATEMAN TAKES A BREAK FROM BEING MR. NICE GUY IN BAD WORDS.

IF YOU WERE A TEEN IN THE '80s, YOU LIKELY spent time sitting on your acid-washed tuchis watching Jason Bateman and Michael J. Fox on TV. (C'mon—there were only three networks at the time.) Fox had a breakout hit with Family Ties, leading to a starring role in the top-grossing film of '85, Back to the Future, and the less-acclaimed Teen Wolf, which nevertheless became the 26th highest earner that same year. Meanwhile, Bateman spent the first two seasons of the Ricky Schroder vehicle Silver Spoons playing a bad boy, until he was dropped from the program, presumably because Ricky had picked up enough ill manners from Bateman's memorable wiseass. He went on to star in the sequel to one of Fox's big-screen hits—alas, not Back to the Future Part II, but Teen Wolf Too, which, as the 93rd highest moneymaker of '87, really was a howler.

By the time Arrested Development reached the airwaves 16 years later, Bateman finally seemed to have the hit that he deserved. The comedy series was a critical darling—so, naturally, it was eventually cancelled. Nevertheless, Bateman was on audiences' radars, and, after memorable turns in a couple of not-so-memorable big screen comedies (2011's Horrible Bosses and The Change-Up), he was poised to strike pay dirt last year when Netflix successfully resurrected Arrested Development. And he co-starred with Melissa McCarthy in Identity Thief, which received dismal reviews but became a box-office hit.

What most of Bateman's movie roles have lacked is that smarmy charm he had on Silver Spoons. Even in a film titled Horrible Bosses, he was saddled with playing the Really Nice Guy. So, I'd like to imagine that as he earned the right to be his own boss, and decided to direct his own film, he recognized it was time to return to his roots, casting himself as a brilliant schmuck in Bad Words, an acidic comedy that proves he's just as talented behind the camera.

What most of Bateman's movie roles have lacked, however, is that smarmy charm that he developed during Silver Spoons.

Bateman plays Guy Trilby, a 40-year-old loner who edits fine print for a living. Trilby stumbles across some especially fine print that allows him, a man who never graduated from the eighth grade, to become an "idiot hijacker" of children's spelling bees, for purposes that will remain a mystery for most of the film's running time.

When we first see Trilby, it's at the regional spelling bee in Columbus, Ohio. We soon realize that this isn't the first time he's exploited the loophole he's discovered, and it certainly won't be the last—even if every parent and contest administrator wants him dead. And why not, when he verbally and mentally abuses everyone in his path on his road to the Golden Quill National Spelling Bee, an institution for more than a century, one that he gleefully plans on metaphorically burning to the ground. But first, he needs to take Columbus, and as he smugly stands onstage, towering over the "pre-masturbators" he's competing against, he addresses all the mothers who have gathered to cheer on their sweet little poindexters.

"Hey, Moms? Break out the rubber pillowcases; the little pricks are going to be counting tears tonight instead of sheep."

Is it any surprise that Trilby, winning trophy in hand, goes running from the auditorium pursued by an angry mob resembling the natives chasing Indiana Jones at the outset of Raiders of the Lost Ark? This bloodthirsty bunch fears broken dreams and innocence lost, and Trilby's just taken the apple from paradise.

Driving his getaway car is Jenny Widgeon (Kathryn Hahn of We're the Millers), a reporter who senses something within Trilby. Sure, it might simply be bile, but he requires a media sponsor for his scheme to work, and she needs a story. Plus, opposites attract—or, at least, they like to screw while screaming, "Don't f---ing look at me!"

Credit should be given to Andrew Dodge; Bad Words is his first produced screenplay, and he isn't joking around with that title. However, there are heartfelt moments within this wonderfully debauched comedy. Trilby forges an unlikely bond with a competitor, an awkward 10-year-old named Chaitanya Chopra (Homeland's Rohan Chand). Though our antihero dubs him "Slumdog," Chopra remains unfazed, even as Trilby introduces his young friend to smoking, shoplifting, drinking and streetwalkers.

As the two bond over a shared love of language (and boobs), Chopra tells Trilby that his favorite word is "subjugate." Hmm. Turns out, Trilby might not be the only one with a hidden agenda.

What's this all building to? I won't say, but I will direct you to the tagline on the film's poster: "The end justifies the mean." And how. For Bateman, it's been a long time coming. ◆

LUNAR LAUNCH

A CLASSICALLY TRAINED SONGWRITER FINDS HER VOICE WITH AN ASTONISHING POP DEBUT.

WITH HER SHAVED HEAD, DRAMATIC lashes and regal presence, Laura Mvula commanded attention before she'd even sung a note last spring on Later... with Jools Holland, the British music showcase also broadcast in the U.S. But her soulful alto sealed the deal, as it does on Sing to the Moon, which emerged as one of 2013's most captivating debuts.

Hard to believe that barely three years ago, Mvula was a receptionist for the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, sending out demos of her songs as a classically trained composer shy of the vocal spotlight. Her universe shifted when producer Steve Brown (Elton John, the Cult) responded to that music. Mvula recorded Sing to the Moon, which shot to acclaim, vying for awards like the prestigious Mercury Prize for U.K. album of the year.

"I haven't really had much time to process all the exciting things that have happened," Mvula, 27, says from London. "I'm a big dreamer. I've always been that way. The surprise is that I never expected it to be a reality."

Those dreams came true under the celestial tug of Sing to the Moon, where Mvula multitracked her rich vocals across strings and bell-like percussion to forge a sound unique to the pop landscape. "The voice is something within that bigger picture," says the composition graduate of Birmingham Conservatoire. "The emphasis on being a singer is off-point to me, and it can be a distraction in our X Factor generation... What's more important is the music, what you're doing with it."

Grounded in piano and violin in a musical family weaned on jazz and gospel (younger siblings James and Dionne now play cello and violin in her touring band), she preferred singing in a chorus to taking the vocal lead. "I just got really attached to voices and, particularly, harmony," says Mvula, who was inspired by the English R&B girl group Eternal as well as Nina Simone. She joined her aunt Carol Pemberton's a cappella ensemble Black Voices and later directed a community gospel choir.

Mvula's penchant for harmony and texture color her songs, which were incubated in sketches on her laptop and fleshed out with strings, horns and cascading overdubs of her vocals in the studio. "It was much more experimental," she says, "but it was always this core sound that was making its presence known through the process, like 'This is me.'"

"Music becomes personal to people very quickly if they connect to it."

Sing to the Moon magnifies ethereal ballads, intricately arranged yet often minimalist in tone. Nonetheless, its undercurrent of martial drums and orchestral percussion yields to a more driving beat on "Green Garden" and the album's affirmative peak, "That's Alright," about finding validity, respect and, ultimately, freedom for yourself.

"It's a song that comes out of exhaustion from being on a journey, an endless driving for affirmation from others," she says. "It seemed like a dead-end road—just hard, especially in putting a record out."

Now, with the success of Sing to the Moon, Mvula has realized another ambition: She recently re-recorded the album with Holland's Metropole Orchestra at Abbey Road Studios. "[It was] just hearing it almost as it was imagined to be," she says of the recording, slated for a late spring release. "If you consider [that the original album] was like a nucleus, this is it in real form, with everything climaxed."

Mvula says she hopes to eventually tour with an orchestra. But for now, she's returning to the U.S. for a tour that includes an April 7 date at the Sinclair, fronting her sextet that includes classical harp, drums, upright bass, cello and violin, with vocal harmonies all around.

She's thankful to be touring with her siblings. "They just keep me sane and focused and not taking life too seriously," Mvula says. And they help temper her stage fright ("Another thing that I had to learn to manage, and I'm still learning"), as do her receptive fans.

"I remember feeling this was a very private, personal niche thing," she says of her album. "Music becomes personal to people very quickly if they connect to it—and that's been incredible to watch." ◆

MEAL AND DEAL

A LOOK AT THE POWER LUNCH, THEN AND NOW

I CAN GO WEEKS EATING MY LUNCH AT MY office desk, rarely venturing to a restaurant. Often, client meetings happen at my office over sandwiches, salads and the occasional soup. The intensity of modern business life dictates this somewhat sad ritual. I don't think anyone gets any joy out of this. When I started to work in Boston, it seemed like everyone—from mail guys to secretaries, from worker bees to bosses—went out for lunch, wanting to take a break, stretch their legs, maybe pause to turn their faces up to the sun. Like recess for adults.

A friend recently brought me a newspaper column from the late 1970s in which I was quoted. It was about power lunches in Boston. Compared to today, the scenes described seem almost as distant as Victorian England. According to the column, 55 percent of people surveyed said they drank at lunch. I can tell you that 100 percent of the people in finance, advertising and publishing—which was huge here in the 1970s—drank. Literary business went on at the old Ritz (now the Taj) and Locke-Ober, where the chairman of publisher Little, Brown had a usual table. (It was kept empty after his death, save for a single gin martini, straight up.) The head of publicity at the biggest publishing house would drink several "see-throughs" (martinis), followed by wine and brandy if the author was a big enough name. Authors always drank and ate prodigious amounts, since the publisher paid. And all of them felt they were being screwed by their publisher. The complaints of the literary world, at least, have never changed.

These power lunches in the 1970s were always two hours or longer, and all were exclusively male. They happened at such places as the Federal Club atop the Bank of Boston building, the Bay Club, 28 State Street, Joseph's restaurant in the Back Bay, the Fort Hill Club in downtown Boston. Politicos convened at the Parker House and Dini's, advertising executives at the Copley Plaza hotel. While the physical addresses may remain, most of the names and owners have changed; the formality of those days, the dance of the dining and drinks culture, is gone forever. I remember when One Boston Place, which now houses BNY Mellon, was home to the Boston Company, which had an executive dining room with a private salon for the chairman. One of them entertained me—he the Rajah, I the emissary from a distant court. A whiskey, a loin of veal, a carafe of claret, a chocolate sundae and, if I cared to, a brandy or a glass of port. I went home after lunch.

There's not as much fun today, and less power as well, it seems. Since the late 1970s, we've lost most of our New England shoe manufacturers, lost the textile people, lost the majority of big local banks and insurance companies. The dozens of investment firms and mutual funds have largely been absorbed by entities outside of Boston. A friend of mine, the former CEO of one of our biggest banks, told me: "There are no more power lunches, and very little power as well. Mostly people eat in as far as I can see. Occasionally, I go to the new steakhouses or the downtown Harvard or BC Clubs, or the Four Seasons. I have a glass of wine, maybe, at a Christmas lunch. That's it. Everyone's on a diet and everyone's too busy.... It's over, what used to be." Of course, in some respects, that's a very good thing. "Women are definitely at the tables now," he said. "You want energy? Go to Kendall Square—energy, creativity, innovation, bouncing off the walls. Power, no. Lunch in conference rooms, or quickies at new restaurants in jeans and T-shirts with bean sprouts."

A whiskey, a loin of veal, a carafe of claret, a chocolate sundae and, if I cared to, a brandy or a glass of port. I went home after lunch.

Today I see people who hope for better jobs someday, rolling carts down side streets, loaded up with take-out food for catered lunches for lawyers and investment company offices. One of our largest real estate developers said, "Well, I like Brasserie JO for lunch, and I like my lunches. But really, if I want to linger over lunch, it will be in Paris."

But everyone I talked with agreed on one thing, that the closest Boston comes these days to power meals is breakfast at Kevin Phelan's office at Colliers International. Kevin is one of Boston's best-known citizens, particularly in the political arena. He pays attention and runs a quirky salon in the morning for Boston's most generous and involved people. I talked with a frequent visitor to these very informal gatherings. "Kevin's?" he said. "Great conversation, mostly over water and Munchkins from Dunkin's."

Well, I like Munchkins. But you can't turn back the clock. ◆

SURREAL ESTATE

A GUIDE TO GREATER BOSTON'S LESSER-KNOWN NEIGHBORHOODS

IT'S ALMOST SPRING, WHICH MEANS IT'S TIME to talk about Whitey Bulger and real estate. Did you hear about Bulger crying in court? Courtroom accounts say that the tears ran straight down into his jolly white beard, making him look like a sad, murderous gangster Santa. But when asked if his tears were an expression of remorse for all his heinous crimes, Bulger sobbed, "Southie—it's so gentrified. It's like I don't even know where I'd go to stab anyone anymore. My old hideout is now a pop-up store that only sells vintage boom boxes." Bulger went on to lament that Southie is so famous that tourists come from all over the world just to see the double-parking.

So if you're looking for real estate upside, Southie is done, guy. It's over, chief. It's yesterday's news, my delicate little orchid glistening in the springtime dew like a cherub dropped straight from the heavens. I mean, fella.

First the South End got cool. Then Southie. I've even heard rumors of a place called Jamaica Plane, which I guess is an ironic "neighborhood" that references Hey Mon Airlines from that old In Living Color sketch. But what's next? I'm gonna tell you.

The spring real estate market is already heating up, but if you move quickly you can still get in on DInGLeBeRrY, which stands for Down In the Gravelly Lower Boundary Right Off Yawkey. The Mass Pike calls it an underpass. I call it the hottest new micro-neighborhood in Boston.

Everybody and his farrier knows about the North End, the South End and even the West End. But what about the East End? That's virgin territory, right now populated only by seals, Codzilla and that guy who lived in a canoe. Keep your eye on maritime salvage law, because this neighborhood's 360-degree water views won't remain undeveloped forever.

Moving inland, KneeJerk is a half-block stretch beneath Kneeland Street wherc you can get the best Caribbean chicken. DotComm is a section of Dorchester where you'll find the secret tunnels that lead to Comm. Ave.'s biggest speakeasy. And have you heard of Bruce's Condo? This is a very specific neighborhood consisting of Bruce and his two terriers. He was looking for a roommate, but maybe he's already found one. The Boston real estate market is truly ever-changing.

That's certainly true of mobile neighborhood Kubla Khan, a new zeppelin-based luxury development and opium den currently tethered above Beacon Hill. After the great molasses tragedy of 1919, there was a brief movement to allow residential airships, which are usually impervious to molasses floods. Zoning was changed and blimps are still allowed in the city proper, providcd they're of a length no greater than the height of the tallest church steeple in Suffolk County. But when it comes to blimp real estate, you know what they say: location, location—oh my God, look out!

On the more affordable end of the spectrum, students might want to check out Hardy Har Har, the neighborhood at the intersection of Harvard Street, Harvard Avenue and Harvard Court. Thanks to an elaborate Lampoon prank involving Frederick Law Olmsted, this area is nowhere near Harvard.

If you really want to score a deal, you might have to think outside Boston proper. Longtime city dwellers often speak contemptuously of the "bridge and tunnel crowd," and I think that's understandable. After all, who wants to hang out with people who live under bridges and inside tunnels? They're sallow-faced and wild-eyed, and they take all the good parking spots after they emerge, blinking, into the soft dusk of a Friday night. But if you cross over the bridges and tunnels, you'll come to suburbs, some of which are quite nice and mostly free of mole men.

What about the East End? That's virgin territory, right now populated only by seals, Codzilla and that guy who lived in a canoe.

If you commute on the Red Line, check out North Braintree. Mark my words, everyone's gonna want to live in NoBrain! But the hottest suburb right now is Beckerwood, which is convenient to the commuter rail, the commuter boat, the Pike, the Silk Road, the Oregon Trail, the MetroWest dogsled route and of course the new canopy zip lines. As a word of caution, the town of Beckerwood is embroiled in a legal dispute over its ongoing attempt to annex Needham. These days you often see passionate Beckerwood residents pacing the roofs of the Newton tolls, holding signs that read, "We Need Ham!" Geopolitical scientists assert that this conflict isn't about ham at all, but rather a play for Needham's prized town reservoir and its strategically important fluoride reserves. However it plays out, the suburbs have, like, one good restaurant, so who cares?

Of course, even South Boston still has undiscovered pockets of potential, like South E Street. South E Southie is proximate to a singing telegram business that will dispatch a guy in a gorilla costume to sing you "Happy Birthday." I'm actually not making that up. Someone please order me one, and quickly. I'm double-parked. ◆

Soroff On / Kate Burton

DRAMA QUEEN

ACTRESS KATE BURTON SOUNDS OFF ON STAGE, SCREEN AND ADVICE FOR THE BIEBS.

THREE-TIME TONY NOMINEE KATE BURTON, 56, IS appearing alongside her son, Morgan Ritchie, in the Huntington Theatre Company's new production of Chekhov classic The Seagull. The daughter of producer Sybil Burton and the legendary Richard (and stepdaughter of screen icon Elizabeth Taylor), Kate Burton earned a bachelor's degree from Brown University, where she now serves as a trustee. She later earned a graduate degree from the Yale School of Drama. She's appeared on Broadway in productions such as Hedda Gabler and The Elephant Man, and her numerous film credits include Big Trouble in Little China, The Ice Storm, Unfaithful and 127 Hours. She's also appeared extensively on television, with recurring roles on shows like Grey's Anatomy, but she recently achieved a new level of notoriety for her portrayal of Vice President Sally Langston (who murders her husband) on the hit TV show Scandal. She lives in Los Angeles.

JONATHAN SOROFF: So have you ever actually tried to kill your husband?
KATE BURTON: [Laughs] No. Doing it on television satisfied that particular homicidal impulse.

How does the daughter of one of the greatest actors of his generation get the cojones to act? Well, I didn't originally set out to act. It's not what I studied as an undergraduate, but eventually I just realized it was what I wanted to do. I think acting is one of those things you do because you can't not do it.

So it's bred in the bone? I guess in some way, yes. My father, me, my son, we all share some kind of genetic predisposition.

Did you ever find it difficult to act with your father or your son? No. At first there's a certain awareness, but once we get to work, I actually forget that this person is related to me by blood, which might sound strange, but it's true. It's also probably a testament to what a good actor my son is.

Favorite theater? The Huntington, and I'm not just saying that because I'm appearing there. The physical attributes—it's just a jewel—and the people involved are all fantastic. Boston's very, very lucky to have the Huntington Theatre Company.

So who's the first lady of the Williamstown Theatre Festival: you or Blythe Danner? I don't think either of us is at this point. It's probably someone much younger.

What role took the most out of you emotionally? I think probably The Cherry Orchard [a 2007 Huntington production]. It was very draining but also incredibly rewarding.

When you were young, did you have any idea of the media circus surrounding your family? Oh, sure, you couldn't help but notice it, but kids are very resilient, and my parents were very good at protecting us from it. I just assumed that was what happened.

Your father and Elizabeth Taylor were sort of the birth of tabloid culture. Do you have any advice for people like Miley Cyrus, Justin Bieber or Lindsay Lohan? That's very true about my father and Elizabeth. It was sort of the start of this obsession with celebrity. But with these young actors, I just feel sad that they live in this environment that almost ensures they'll behave erratically. You have these very talented, impressionable young people surrounded by assistants and managers and other people with a vested interest, who enable them to behave however they choose. They never hear the word no. It's no wonder they end up acting outlandishly.

Do you have a favorite Elizabeth Taylor memory? Oh, God. So many. Elizabeth was great. She was a wonderful stepmother to me. I mostly remember mundane things, like eating breakfast together, but she was so funny and great fun to be with. Wonderful with children. Very down to earth and earthy. I was very lucky. I had two fantastic stepparents, because my mother married [actor and singer] Jordan Christopher, who was also a tremendous influence in my life.

"I think acting is one of those things you do because you can't not do it."

Are soap operas great training ground for an actor? No. But they are interesting. It's an intense amount of work, a lot of dialogue to remember. I have a lot of respect for soap opera actors.

Has Joe Biden been in touch? [Laughs] Not yet. I'm not sure he'd want to be associated with my character on Scandal.

Do you find that people come to see you in plays because they've seen you on TV or in films? I suppose some do, and that's probably more pronounced in more isolated places, but in a city like Boston, I don't think so. Bostonians just love the theater, and they come to see it because of that.

So what does a Tony nomination mean for your payday? Not very much, I'm afraid. The theater doesn't pay the way film or television does. But I guess it's easier to get work, and I'm just grateful to be a working actor.

Speaking of Tonys, is Tony Goldwyn as wildly sexy as I think he is? Well, I definitely don't see him that way. We've known each other far too long. He is an absolutely brilliant man, though. And from someone else's perspective, I can see the appeal. He's a very compelling, magnetic person.

Actor you'd love to work with? That list is far too long for an interview, but definitely Judi Dench.

You once said that you get cast as the sweet wife or the sweet dead wife. Do you think your role on Scandal has changed that? Well, my character certainly isn't sweet on Scandal, so I guess the winds have shifted. ◆

CHANGE OF ART

Warm up for spring's divine dance, survey the season's smart art and pay some attention to the men and women behind the curtain.

ALL THE RIGHT MOVES

Boston's dance scene is poised for a stellar spring.

BY Jonathan Soroff

"Unrestrained, there seems to be no limits to which dancing will not deseend," deerced the infamous Wateh and Ward Society, which sought to make belly dancing, barefoot dancing and other suspeet forms of movement "banned in Boston," warning against vice "made possible under the pretext of 'art.'" But less than a century after Mayor Andrew Peters considered shutting down a Ziegfeld Follies performance for fear the dancers would show too mueh leg, we've evolved into a city where dance is a major feature of the cultural landseape. And some of the most cutting-edge work in the genre is being performed, and even premiered, right here.

MOZART BY MIZRAHI: DESIGNER ISAAC MIZRAHI IS DESIGNING COSTUMES FOR MARK MORRIS' ACIS AND GALATEA.

"Boston has always had wonderful dance audiences, but now there's a greater hunger for really smart, adventurous work," says native son David Parker, the celebrated choreographer (and offspring of the late author Robert B. Parker and his philanthropist wife, Joan). For the past few years, David Parker and his New York-based Bang Group have been at the forefront of an exciting new dance/cabaret genre, creating works that he describes as what happens when "high and low art meet and make out on a nightclub stage." The idea harks back to the days of elegant supper clubs, and while Parker characterizes the shows as "fully realized and seriously wrought," he says that the cabaret setting liberates his imagination in ways that a concert stage doesn't allow.

This month, Parker brings two such shows to the Oberon theater in Cambridge: Head Over Heels, which he describes as "a kind of Jules et Jim in tap shoes," and ShowDown, set to Irving Berlin's score for Annie Get Your Gun. "I think Boston's dance community is poised to take a big leap forward," says Parker, who's tapping local talent for his March 28 performance. "For the final night of my run at Oberon, I've commissioned three Boston choreographers—Lorraine Chapman, Kelli Edwards and Nicole Pierce—to make works that will share the stage with my piece ShowDown." Furthermore, Parker notes that he's working in partnership with DanceNow/NYC to put down roots in Boston and create a touring circuit that will exchange shows between the two cities.

Equally exciting is the East Coast premiere of contemporary dance deity Mark Morris' Acis and Galatea, running May 15-18. Presented at Citi Shubert Theatre by the Celebrity Series of Boston, the new production from Mark Morris Dance Group is based on Mozart's arrangement of the opera by Handel. Drawn from Ovid's Metamorphoses, the story follows a shepherd boy who falls in love with a nymph on a Mediterranean isle. In addition to Morris' choreography, the production will feature costumes by designer Isaac Mizrahi, sets by Broadway veteran Adrianne Lobel and live orchestral and vocal accompaniment courtesy of Boston's own Handel and Haydn Society. A collaboration of this caliber—fusing some of the top talent from the worlds of dance, fashion, theater and music—is a sure sign of increased interest in dance. And the fact that Acis and Galatea will be shown here in Boston before gracing a stage in New York is an indication of Boston's increasing prominence in the dance world.

A collaboration of this caliber—fusing some of the top talent from the worlds of dance, fashion, theater and music—is a sure sign of increased interest in dance.

"The selection of Boston for the East Coast premiere of Acis and Galatea," Morris says, "is a combination of ongoing support from the Celebrity Series, Bostonians' keen interest in my work and my dance group's long history performing in the city. All of this keeps us coming back nearly every year."

Of course, Boston's homegrown dance scene is equally impressive. For proof, one need look no further than Boston Ballet, currently celebrating its 50th anniversary season. Arguably, there are only three other companies in the U.S.—New York City Ballet, American Ballet Theatre and the San Francisco Ballet—that can claim to perform at the same artistic level, and none can also boast of an educational program as ambitious as that of Boston Ballet. "We have the largest ballet school in the country by a wide margin, teaching all levels from pre-professional to adult beginner," says board of overseers chair John Osbon. "Almost all Boston Ballet teachers have themselves had significant professional ballet performing careers, many of them at the principal level."

Its programming, meanwhile, goes far beyond classical story ballets, like the current lush production of Sir Frederick Ashton's fairy tale Cinderella, to include the decidedly radical, like the recently performed Bella Figura—Czech choreographer Jiří Kylián's tour de force that includes topless dancers of both sexes wearing full red skirts. The rest of this season includes Pricked, which runs May 8-18 and features two American premieres among its three ballets. In D.M.J. 1953-1977, Petr Zuska uses music by three Czech composers and armfuls of roses in a ballet that resembles Druids dancing around Stonehenge more than anything from Swan Lake, while Alexander Ekman's Cacti is percussive, frenetic and wholly untraditional. Rounding out that program is Harald Landers' homage to the art form, Études, which takes a traditional ballet class and stands it completely on its head. Then, from May 22 to June 1, Boston Ballet will conclude its season with George Balanchine's *Jewels, which has been referred to as "the first full-length abstract" ballet, before the company leaves to tour New York—for its debut performance at Lincoln Center—and Washington, D.C.

Theater Foundation, it commissions some of the most innovative choreographers and showcases their work with bravura performances. The L.A.-based troupe makes its Boston debut April 11-12 at the Institute of Contemporary Art with Sidra Bell's Beyond the Edge of the Frame, MacArthur fellow Kyle Abraham's Kollide and Richard Siegal's jazzy o2Joy.

• José Mateo Ballet Theatre, which produces striking original work by the Cuban-born dancer/choreographer, closes its 28th season with New Eruptions. Running April 25 to May 11, the show includes Mateo's 2012 work Taking Turns, set to a Philip Glass score,

"Almost all Boston Ballet teachers have themselves had significant professional ballet performing careers, many of them at the principal level."

And that's not all that'll keep us on the edge of our seats. Here are six more dance performances you won't want to miss this spring:

• Characterized by explosive movement and an almost feral stage presence, contemporary company BodyTraffic was founded in 2007 by Lillian Barbeito and Tina Finkelman Berkett. Named one of Dance magazine's "25 to Watch" in 2013 and dubbed "the company of the future" by the Joyce as well as the premiere of an unnamed new ballet. It will be performed in the Sanctuary Theatre in the Old Cambridge Baptist Church, a unique space that affords audiences rare proximity to the performers. (For more dance on a nontraditional stage, stay tuned for Mateo's sixth annual Dance for World Community Festival, June 13-15, featuring a range of troupes performing outside in Harvard Square.)

• April 16-19, The Boston Conservatory will present Limitless, a program featuring Mark Morris' Canonic 3/4 Studies, Karole Armitage's Rave and works by Tommy Neblett and Dwight Rhoden, the artistic director of Complexions Dance Company. Morris' piece, based upon songs in three-quarter time, offers a contemporary take on waltzes, while Rhoden, a former star with Alvin Ailey, is widely hailed as one of the country's leading contemporary choreographers. (Friday's matinee is a free performance for individuals with special needs and their families and is not open to the general public.)

• A contemporary troupe of 30-plus versatile performers with diverse dance backgrounds, Urbanity Dance is led by former Boston Ballet School teacher Betsi Graves and has performed at stages such as the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival in the Berkshires and the Alvin Ailey Citigroup Theater in New York. So we've got high expectations for its Spring Revue, being performed May 2-3 at the Boston University Dance Theater, especially since the company won our Boston's Best award in 2012. It's only picked up speed since, with plans to move into a big new headquarters on Washington Street this spring.

• Your average flash mob has nothing on Le Grand Continental, a free public event hosted by Celebrity Series of Boston May 16-18 in Copley Square. The brainchild of Montreal-based choreographer Sylvain Émard, the outdoor dance extravaganza will engage 150 Bostonians of all ages, shapes and sizes in a contemporary line dance—no prior dance experience required, though they're already hard at work in rehearsal. The end result: a Bollywood-scale spectacle in downtown Boston, guaranteed to put a smile on your face and some pep in your step.

• Peter DiMuro danced his first pro performance at Cambridge's Dance Complex, but in more recent years the choreographer has made waves in Philadelphia and D.C. with his company Public Displays of Motion. Now he's back where it all began, serving as executive director of the Dance Complex. And from May 19 through June 22, he'll also be in residence at the Boston Center for the Arts, developing dances with Public Displays of Motion. The new works will debut with performances on June 20-21, serving as companion pieces to the award-winning Norman Allen play Nijinsky's Last Dance, which depicts the legendary dancer institutionalized at the end of his life. ◆

FIELD OF VISIONS

A sneak peek at the season's must-see exhibits.

BY Jacqueline Houton

1. Kenji Nakayama moved to Boston from Japan a decade ago to study traditional sign painting, a skill he's plied in his day job at Best Dressed Signs and in his Signs for the Homeless project, featuring interviews and photos of homeless locals who exchange cardboard signs for colorful hand-painted versions. Recently, he's used his pinstriping prowess in abstract compositions, evoking stained glass and Edo-era calligraphy. On view April 18-May 18 at Fourth Wall Project, his first solo Boston show, Études, collects 49 of these works on paper, plus 3-D pieces like a huge crucifix rescued from the trash and transformed.

2. Forthcoming gallery/restaurant Liquid Art House serves up street art for its inaugural exhibit, Outside In. On view May 6-June 18, it taps talents from around the world, among them brothers ICY and SOT, 20-something stencil artists who moved to Brooklyn in 2012 after being arrested and interrogated in their native Iran. They started out stenciling their skateboards, but have since brought their punchy, politically charged art to gallery walls and urban canvases in Tehran, Paris, New York, Amsterdam and beyond.

3. A thousand words are worth a picture at Panopticon Gallery, which hosts W-O-R-D-P-L-A-Y through June 9, showcasing photography and mixed-media works that draw upon letters and literature. It features 13 artists, including Frank Armstrong, who has more than 50 years of photos under his belt, and Shannon McDonald, who creates her collages in a shoe factory turned studio in Rockland.

4. Hopper meets Hitchcock in the photos of husband-and-wife team BJ and Richeille Formento. She was a high-fashion art director; he a commercial photographer who assisted Avedon and Leibovitz. They met on a shoot, married three months later and now collaborate on highly stylized tableaux—like the dark, dreamy series Circumstance, featuring women they met on a cross-country road trip, who turn into femme fatales in faded diners and abandoned motels. Robert Klein Gallery will host a Formento & Formento show this spring, likely in May.

5. Permission To Be Global/Prácticas Globales: Latin American Art from the Ella Fontanals-Cisneros Collection hits the Museum of Fine Arts March 19-July 13 with works by 46 artists, many never featured in Boston. Curator Jen Mergel notes "the extraordinary variety and diversity of the work," ranging from humble—Wilfredo Prieto's Untitled (Globe of the World), inked onto a dried pea—to high-tech, like Rafael Lozano-Hemmer's Third Person, which incorporates digital surveillance. Many pack political punch, like Daniel Medina's sculpture at left, suggestive of a security gate, and the indelible video ¿Quién puede borrar las huellas? (Who Can Erase the Traces?), in which Regina José Galindo walks to Guatemala City's National Palace, dipping her feet in human blood every few steps in defiant protest of a dictator's presidential candidacy.

6. Born in the Bronx in 1935, Eleanor Antin has since lived many lives—as a Crimean War nurse, a typecast ballerina in the Ballets Russes, a bearded king who rules a bemused beach town. Through films, photographs, performances, writings and even paper dolls, she's explored history and identity with a slippery sense of humor and a cast of richly imagined alter egos. Meet them at the Institute of Contemporary Art March 19-July 6 in Multiple Occupancy: Eleanor Antin's "Selves," opening with a reading by the artist from her new memoir (which takes some liberties, incorporating chitchat with Stalin).

7. The Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum hosts its first fashion exhibit with The Barefoot Designer: A Passion for Radical Design and Community, on view April 17-Sept. 1. Preserving the past while pursuing an aesthetic that's highly contemporary, even futuristic, Mexican designer Carla Fernández collaborates with indigenous artisans, tapping traditional handicraft techniques and patterns from preindustrial textiles. This month, she'll be in town working on a fashion shoot for the exhibit, which also features her garments and textiles, drawings, performance, video, hands-on workshops and an April 19 lecture with Fernández.

8. Squeamish types may want to steer clear of the Mills Gallery April 25-June 29, when the BCA space will host Jordan Eagles: Blood Dust, a solo show from an artist who's worked in blood for more than a decade. It's a surprisingly versatile medium in the hands of the New York-based Eagles, who preserves it using plexiglass and UV resin, mixes it with copper, backlights it to breathtaking effect and, yes, grinds it to dust.

BREAKING THE FOURTH WALL

And the fifth, and the sixth! We draw back the curtain on Boston's spring productions.

BY Alexandra Cavallo
PHOTOGRAPHED BY Adam DeTour

JASON ALLEN

The cast of characters who work in theater extends far beyond the actors who enjoy the spotlight night after night. So we decided to turn that spotlight on some hard-working pros in a wide range of roles—from wig designer to playwright to artistic director (and, yes, to one leading lady)—and get the inside angles on Boston's spring theater season.

AMANDA OSTROW

JASON ALLEN, Wig and Makeup Designer
Boston Lyric Opera's I Puritani
May 2-11 at the Citi Shubert Theatre

Allen pulls double-duty for BLO's closing production of the season, creating handcrafted wigs and makeup designs for Vincenzo Bellini's opera about a young woman who spirals into insanity, believing her love has rebuffed her. Each wig takes him 30 to 35 hours to make, a painstaking process that seems a bit maddening in its own right.

"We start with a really fine mesh, and you actually build a cap in the shape of the head mold you take of the person," Allen explains. "Then we use what's called a ventilating needle, which is a tiny, tiny hook—almost like hooking a rug, but on a really small scale. Then you pull four or five hairs through and tie it in a little, tiny knot, working up to the front, where you then pull it through, single hair by single hair, and tie it in a knot onto the netting."

And after all that labor? "I've been doing this for 20 years now," Allen says. "Still, when you go for the final fitting, there's that little bit of panic. 'What if I've totally messed this up, and spent 35 hours doing it, and it doesn't fit?' I think that never goes away."

Allen recalls one ballet's particularly memorable wig malfunction. "There were a bunch of skeleton witches dancing, and they had wired coils coming out of their hair. Two of them got really close together and got their wigs tangled," he says. "We had them attached really, really well, and they couldn't get their heads apart." Eventually, one pulled off the other's wig, leaving her bare in a wig cap. "But they danced around with their heads attached for quite a while!"

The wigs are made from human hair, which Allen prefers because it's natural-looking and easy to work with. He admits, however, that he was a bit squeamish early in his career. "It was a little creepy," he laughs. "Now I'm just so used to it, and I work with it so much, that I'm picking human hair off myself all the time. I shave my head. I'm bald! So it's funny that I always have hair on me."

AMANDA OSTROW, Wardrobe Supervisor
SpeakEasy Stage Company's The Whale
Through April 5 at the BCA's Calderwood Pavilion

Ostrow works by day as assistant box office manager at Emerson's theaters, but by night she's busy getting casts costumed. Arriving two hours before the actors and there at least an hour later, she also ensures those costumes are clean and pressed for every show. Since first getting a taste of stage and costume management while working with the Actors' Shakespeare Project in 2006, she's done everything from getting an actor into roller skates—blindly tying his laces from backstage through a hole cut into a prop phone booth while he continued singing onstage—to shouldering some weighty responsibilities in The Whale, including helping lead actor John Kuntz with his costume. To play Charlie, a couch-bound, 600-pound recluse hoping to make amends with his estranged daughter, he has to don a remarkably realistic fat suit, weighing nearly 30 pounds.

"It takes two people to get him into it," she laughs. "We're going to have big muscles by the time we're done with this show!"

Along with wrangling Kuntz into his cumbersome suit, Ostrow handles his prosthetic chin, a piece of synthetic skin that affixes just below his jawline. Ostrow uses cosmetic paint to achieve the right hue and secures the loose flap of fake flesh, taking care to ensure it won't detach midshow.

Needless to say, it gets quite hot inside a 30-pound suit under stage lights, so Ostrow is also tasked with odor control—a challenge requiring some ingenuity. "It's been a crazy research process," she says. "We use a mixture of vodka and water to spray it. It removes odor from anything, but doesn't give off that flowery smell of Febreze."

While Ostrow admits her job isn't always glamorous, she couldn't be more grateful for the creative opportunities it has afforded her. "No matter who you are in this process, the directors want to hear your ideas," she says. "I'm the wardrobe supervisor. Who am I to say, 'I don't think he should be walking that way. It looks weird'? But you say it, and it's like, 'No, you're right. We should look into this.'"

TELLER, Magic Designer
American Repertory Theater's The Tempest
May 10-June 15 at the Loeb Drama Center

You're probably familiar with Teller from his widely popular magic shows as one-half of legendary duo Penn & Teller. But the master illusionist has a lengthy resume that also includes directing and creating magic for the theater. This staging of Shakespeare's romantic comedy has Teller designing illusions to create the title storm, which washes a ship full of aristocrats upon the shores of a magical island inhabited by revenge-seeking sorcerer Prospero.

For Teller, both magic and live theater are about reinvention. "I can imagine some particularly academic critic coming to our Tempest and saying, 'Well, this has not been done in Shakespeare before,'" Teller says. "And I say to them, 'Pooh-pooh.'"

In fact, Teller feels The Tempest is ideally suited for the tricks of his trade. "I'm surprised that more people don't do it, because the play is about using your ability to create illusions as a weapon," he says. "The way Prospero fights is not by hurting people, but by creating illusions that act on them psychologically."

Besides, the Bard would likely approve. "The chances are very good that there were some magic tricks even in Shakespeare's [original] production because he describes, in one of the surviving stage directions from the original text, that 'the feast vanishes by a quaint device.' I'd say 'quaint device' means some kind of trick."

One of his own tricks is employed to "make clear from the very start was that Prospero was causing the storm," Teller says. "We've created a magic trick in which Prospero does a sort of sympathetic magic thing, in which he takes a page of his book and forms the ship, places it in a big bowl of water and enchants it. And we watch that enchantment as the storm is taking place."

MELINDA LOPEZ, Playwright
Huntington Theatre Company's Becoming Cuba
March 28–May 3 at the BCA's Calderwood Pavilion

A longtime fixture on Boston's theater scene as both actress and playwright, Lopez was one of just 14 writers from across the country chosen for the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation's inaugural initiative funding three-year playwright residencies. For her debut as Huntington's first resident playwright, Lopez chose to present her latest work, one close to her heart, about a half-Spanish, half-Cuban widow struggling with conflicting loyalties—to family and to country, as well as her longheld idea of herself—on the eve of the Spanish-American War.

"I'm of Cuban descent, so it's something that's interesting to me," she says. "It was around the time that the Arab Spring was happening [when she started writing the play], and there was a lot of movement among people to have self-determination. I just got a vision of this woman who reminded me of women I know, who are really smart and a little cynical. I had this sense that she starts the play really tightly coiled, and at the end of the play she understands that sometimes you have to burn your life down in order to start over again."

Lopez says that the process of writing is often one of self-discovery, not unlike that of her protagonist. "When you start digging into your own history, you realize all the things that make up who you are. You put that together into a new identity. I'm drawn to history because I think it always reflects on the time that we're living in now."

"And now, it's seeing the protests in Egypt and the protests in Libya, and now in Syria," she continues. "Seeing the people who are really fighting to determine who they are. To say, 'I am this new thing.' It's incredibly inspiring and scary and moving. But I'm a sucker for that stuff. I grew up near the Concord Bridge. And every time I go there I cry. Because I'm like, 'It started here! We're free because of those people that fought here!'"

DAVID REIFFEL, Sound Designer
Actors' Shakespeare Project's As You Like It
April 17–May 18 at Springstep

A sound designer and composer, Reiffel will provide the sound effects and score for this faithful retelling of one of Shakespeare's most popular pastoral comedies, in which the daughter of a banished duke, her cousin and the court fool flee the kingdom and discover a utopian community in the Forest of Arden.

For Reiffel, the venue often plays as large a role in his design as the text. In this case, the play is being staged at Springstep, a modern dance studio in Medford. When the venue was announced, Reiffel's vision immediately changed. "The conception up until then had been much more about Victorian times, and it actually sort of cracked open the play and allowed me more freedom," he says. "There would be no expectation of being literally Victorian, because the whole design concept of the sets and everything is changing to something that is more metaphorical."

The idea of metaphor in design—in sound, as well as in costumes and sets—is something that Reiffel finds elemental to Shakespearean theater.

"There is a lot of leeway in doing a Shakespeare play to be creative, in terms of period and atmosphere," he says. "There are a lot of different ways you can go. I've done other As You Like It [productions] in the past. One of them was very modern and jazzy, because they wanted a really playful but sophisticated approach to it. And then the next production I did, the director had a much darker idea, where the Forest of Arden was actually this threatening place, where there were lions and snakes, as opposed to this happy, bucolic thing. For this one, we're concentrating on a sort of constriction in the court scenes and then a big sense of relaxation when we get to the Forest of Arden. So those are very different moods that I'm trying to establish in essentially the same text."

"When you start digging into your own history, you realize all the things that make up who you are."

ADINA TAL, Director
ArtsEmerson's Not By Bread Alone
April 1–6 at the Paramount Mainstage

Tal directs 11 deaf-blind actors from the Tel Aviv-based Nalaga'at Theater Deaf-Blind Acting Ensemble in this unique play, which allows the audience a taste of life without sight or sound. Through movement, spoken word and surtitled sign language, the actors relay their hopes, dreams and experiences—some as seemingly unremarkable as a trip to the salon, but colored by their unique perspectives. All the while, they will bake bread, which audience members will be invited to sample, creating a shared multisensory experience.

"It's a very big challenge, but a very big privilege, to do something that nobody has ever done before," Tal says of directing a cast of actors who can neither see nor hear one another, which meant that traditional stage cues had to be thrown out in favor of inventive new ones—in this case, the beat of a drum.

"At the beginning they were very angry. They said, 'What do you want from us? We don't hear; we don't see the hands that go to the drum,'" Tal recalls. "But, after six months, all of them started to feel the vibration.... It's a really special experience for the actors, just like opening a window to the outside world."

Adding working ovens to the stage posed further challenges, but Tal says the bread they produce is vital to the play's message. "At the end of the show, the bread comes out of the oven, the whole theater is full of the smell of freshly baked bread, and the audience is invited to come up on stage and taste the bread and communicate with the actors. To see the effect the show has on other people is incredible."

SPIRO VELOUDOS, Artistic Director
Lyric Stage Company's Into the Woods
May 9–June 7 at the Lyric Stage Company

Veloudos is on a mission to encourage diversity and inclusiveness in Boston's theater scene, starting with the Lyric Stage. Closing out the company's 40th anniversary season is Sondheim's oft-staged send-up of classic Grimm fairy tales, from "Little Red Riding Hood" to "Rapunzel," which finds new life in Veloudos' staging.

A moment that drove home the importance of that mission came last year, when Lyric Stage put on a production of Chinglish. "I spoke with an Asian actress, and I asked her, 'Why have I never seen you before?' And she said, 'Because you didn't have anything for me, at least that's what I thought.' And I thought, well that's probably not a good thing. So I started thinking about how we could open up our doors so that people feel comfortable about coming to audition for us."

Part of facilitating what he calls, for lack of a better term, "non-traditional casting," he says, is not waiting for an "Asian play" to invite Asian actors to audition. It's an initiative he's taking very seriously, and it's reflected in Into the Woods, which includes an African-American Little Red and an Asian-American Prince, among other diverse cast members. "I looked at this as a fairy tale land or storytelling land where it doesn't necessarily matter what someone's race is," he says.

Veloudos wants to see "more diverse casts on our stage as the city of Boston becomes a majority of minorities. I lived in Boston in the 1970s, when the city of Boston was not a nice place to ethnic minorities. That has changed, and I think that it makes the city more interesting. I embrace that kind of diversity, and I want to make sure what we are doing at the Lyric is going to be reflective of that."

Veloudos also hopes that this new sense of diversity will extend beyond the stage. "I'm hoping that it will bleed into the audience, as well," he says. "Because people will come to a play if they see themselves onstage.... I think that that is really important to the life of this particular theater, in this particular city, at this time."

CHRISTINE POWER, Actress
Zeitgeist Stage Company's Good Television
April 25–May 17 at the BCA's Black Box Theater

In this comedic drama, Power plays Connie, a producer and intervention counselor for a reality TV show that documents the struggles of people dealing with addiction. (Think: A&E's powerful documentary series Intervention.) But Connie's own demons are conjured when the crew tackles a particularly volatile episode concerning a young meth addict.

While her graduate education involved studies in documentary film, Power admits that she hadn't watched much reality TV before scoring this role. She's found it interesting "to see what the nuances there are, and the difference between scripting and letting things happen naturally," she explains. "But then, the script really goes into how you're still controlling the story, even if you're letting things evolve as they would naturally evolve."

Reality TV is a medium that, for better or worse, has gained a large influence in society. "It's very topical content, and I think it's a good take on it," Power says. "A lot of people do watch reality TV, and there is a sense of, 'Why would these people do this? What do they think going in? What happens to them afterward?' These are real people, and they have to go on and live their life after the TV show is gone and the cameras are gone. How do they deal with it all after?"

Her character is as affected as any of the subjects. "The script really focuses on her journey," she says. "Each character has their own arc, but her story is her own story and is also the larger story, so it's kind of the linchpin of how everything turns. I'm interested to pull it apart and to see where the other characters' stories intersect, and how she influences them, and how that then influences the entire overarching plot." ◆

Design of the Times

Dept. of the Interiors

FOR SEVEN YEARS, ART buffs, furniture aficionados and jewelry fanatics have found common ground under one roof—the Cyclorama's vaulted roof, specifically—at Art and Design of the 20th and 21st Centuries. The latest installment features 50 exhibitors, from local emerging design boutique Room 68 to Quebec furniture designer Kino Guérin to Tokyo's Tolman Collection gallery. But this year is especially exciting, as AD20/21 is part of Boston's first annual Design Week, a citywide fest with open studios, cocktail receptions, film screenings, workshops and panels, including a Q&A with This Old House pros and a talk from local salvage artists Individuals Collective. Whether your taste runs toward the smooth curves of an Eames chair or the rough touch of reclaimed wood, it's a good week to be a design geek. / Rima Butto

HOLY HELL

Oh my God, they lampooned Mormonism! Those bastards! Tony Award winner The Book of Mormon—a musical from the brilliantly perverse minds of South Park creators Trey Parker and Matt Stone, with music by Avenue Q composer Robert Lopez—is an uproarious send-up of the misguided do-goodery of the devout. A pair of earnest, bumbling young missionaries are sent to Uganda to bring the Good Word to the natives. Problem is, the villagers are too busy fending off warlords, AIDS and famine to care all that much about being saved. Marked by Parker and Stone's twisted wit and bolstered by rousing musical numbers like "Spooky Mormon Hell Dream," this play could be the most fun religious experience you'll have all year. See the light April 1-27 at the Boston Opera House. / Alexandra Cavallo

LET'S GET BUFF When a movie award comes in the form of a demonic bunny flipping the bird, golden men and glittery globes start to lose a bit of their luster. Also known as the Bacchus award, a vibrating rabbit trophy is presented to winners at BUFF, the Boston Underground Film Festival. Envisioned as "a celebration of the bizarre and insane," the fest features works that give a one-finger salute to the limits of film, including Blue Ruin (the story of a beach bum turned assassin) and Doomsdays (about the two vagabonds pictured here, who loot offseason vacation homes). Let your freak flag fly March 26-30 at the Brattle Theatre. / Abagail Sullivan

3 Days to Kill ★★ Right before CIA hit man Ethan Renner blows away a coterie of Euro goons, he's on the phone, singing "Happy Birthday" to his cstranged daughter. As the call is cut short by gunfire and explosions, you half expect him to spout off bon mots like "I'm getting too old for this shit." Instead, he coughs and wheezes, and the mucus from his runny nose turns crimson as he mutters, "This cold's killin' me." Turns out, Renner's got brain cancer. "I suggest you get your affairs in order," says a helpful doc. Thus begins the latest of writcr Luc Besson's Paris-set action flicks. Somewhat surprisingly, it doesn't star Liam Neeson, who, at 61, might actually be getting too old for this shit. In his place, 59-year-old Kevin Costner wryly fills the bill, gctting a free pass to look winded while chasing Movie Terrorists. In a formula that's rapidly bccoming rote, Besson recycles his go-to theme of balancing work with family, while director McG stagcs the mayhem in exactly the manner you'd expcct of an adult who calls himself "McG." / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in thc suburbs.)

12 Years a Slave ★★★★ Despite being adapted by screenwriter John Ridley from Solomon Northup's own 1853 memoir, the astonishing 12 Years a Slave is not the story of one man's struggle. This is not a triumph of the human spirit over adversity. It is an autopsy of a systemic pathology that poisoned a nation, laid bare once and for all by a filmmaker without a sentimental bone in his body. We have scen movies about the horrors of slavery before. But this one is about the mechanics. It is about proccss. Director Stevc McQueen actually downplays thc brutality of plantation life, all things considercd. 12 Years a Slave mercly asks you to meet its level gazc and accept the fact that all this actually happencd. Sure, Northup got back home eventually—the title itself is a big honking spoiler. But what of the countless others who were not born in the right place at the right time? What of this cruel and brutal machine that kept grinding along for years afterward? Don't look away. / Sean Burns (Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

300: Rise of an Empire ★ 1/2 Did I ever expect the day would come when I'd miss Zack Snyder? Not to worry: We haven't reached that point yet, but this continuation of 300, his homoerotic frat-bait, is a film that does make me miss Gerard Butler, star of many terrible movies. Compared to Butler's digital-scenery-devouring King Leonidas in 2006's original, relative newcomer Sullivan Stapleton (Animal Kingdom) is actually understated, almost delivering a real performance as Greek general Themistokles, despite the broad speechifying that passes for his dialogue. Which is to say, he's overthought his role. The movie is based on Frank Miller's graphic novel Xerxes, so you'd expect that director Noam Murro would focus on Rodrigo Santoro's mortal-turned-god—but then you'd be doing the overthinking. Thankfully though, Santoro's golden-skinned giant shrinks before the might of Artemisia (Eva Green), commander of the Persian navy. Murro's bloody spectacle is a mess, part prequel, part scquel and mostly unnecessary—except for Green, whosc 3-D nudity will have the college Greeks lining up in grateful servitude. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in thc suburbs.)

American Hustle ★ 1/2 A gaudy spectacle of egregious ovcracting and silly wig humor, writer-director David O. Russell's indulgent riff on the FBI's "Abscam" sting operation is 2013's biggest embarrassment. Christian Balc hcms, haws and makes a lot of De Niro faces as a con-artist dry-cleaning magnate suckered by Bradley Cooper's overzealous agent into setting up a crooked New Jersey mayor (Jeremy Renner). With the overlapping narration tracks, freeze frames, classic-rock soundtrack and cascading camera moves, Russell proves that not only has he seen Goodfellas and Casino, but that he liked them an awful lot. The ins and outs of the grifts aren't particularly interesting, so American Hustle ramps up a contrived love story with Bale and Cooper bickering for the affections of Amy Adams' duplicitous bad girl, who adopts a phony British accent and refuses to wear bras. Jennifer Lawrence eats scenery as Bale's harpy wife, once again stuck in a part for which she is at least 10 years too young. Everybody's miscast and overcompensating, while Russell's directorial karaoke comes off as Scorsese for dummies. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

August: Osage County ★★ Playwright Tracy Letts' honored opus is a cracker Eugene O'Neill riff hopped up on prescription meds and whiskey. It crams 10 or so members of the wildly dysfunctional Weston family into a sweltering, tiny space for all sorts of simultaneous outré revelations and profane recriminations. This literal hothouse ran for more than three hours every night on Broadway to both acclaim and exhaustion. Alas, awards have a way of ruining everything, and thus a severely truncated and defanged August: Osage County is now being presented to movie audiences with an all-star cast as a collection of Academy-friendly "For Your Consideration" meltdown clips. What played as a free-for-all cacophony upon the stage is flattened out by John Wells' pedestrian direction. Almost everyone not named Meryl Streep is pretty terrific in this picture, but that hour and change shorn from Letts' original script leaves most of these performers scrambling to define their characters without the writer's ammunition. Most of this movie feels like it was left on the cutting room floor. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Grand Budapest Hotel ★★★1/2 Wes Anderson's latest confection is a sprawling valentine to a place that never was, an Eastern Europe nestled between the two world wars. Sixteen-year-old Zero Moustafa (newcomer Tony Revolori), the newly minted lobby boy at the titular mountainside retreat, becomes the most trusted friend and companion to M. Gustave (Ralph Fiennes in a gloriously profane performance). Fiennes plays the dandy, "liberally perfumed" concierge for the famed hotel, a physical creation that ranks with The Royal Tenenbaums' townhouse as a believably lived-in space of the imagination. The lightning-paced story encompasses the murder of a dowager (Tilda Swinton), the theft of a fictional Renaissance painting, more murders and the most impressive cast you're likely to encounter in cinemas all year. There are too many stars to list, but I must notc that Andcrson's priceless returning repertory players Bill Murray and Bob Balaban have even less to do here than they did in George Clooney's The Monuments Men, which seems downright criminal. But then, I'm greedy. When a film contains such ornate riches, you simply want more. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Her ★★★★ We all spend too much time with our smartphones, but Joaquin Phoenix falls hard for Siri in this one-joke movie that blossoms into something of a miracle. Written and directed by Being John Malkovich and Where the Wild Things Are savant Spike Jonze, Her is a tender and ruefully funny meditation on modern relationships and what it means to love in a world where we're all in constant communication, yet seemingly lonelier than ever. The film is set in a quasi-futuristic Apple Store Los Angeles, where sentient operating systems work as personal secretaries. Samantha (voiced in an astounding performance by Scarlett Johansson) takes a shine to Phoenix's awkward, introverted Theodore, and the two develop a chemistry that's all the more remarkable because she never actually appears on screen. Her is almost overstuffed with philosophical musings on the role of technology in the way we live now. But in its big aching heart, it's a love story, and a great one. Relationships end and people grow apart, even when they live inside your phone. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Lone Survivor ★★ Good intentions don't always make good movies. The story goes that director Peter Berg agreed to the indignity of directing Battleship, just so long as the studio agreed to fund this bruising, bloody tribute to Navy SEALs fighting in Afghanistan. Working from Marcus Luttrell's memoir (the title of which is a huge spoiler), the film follows four guys stranded in Taliban territory, shooting it out for some 50-odd minutes of screen time in a blow-by-blow account of an operation gone wrong. Lone Survivor means well, but is unbearably dull. Mark Wahlberg, Ben Foster and Emile Hirsch strangle their wild screen personas as interchangeable embodiments of all that is stoic and decent about America. Only Berg's Friday Night Lights discovery Taylor Kitsch is allowed a personality, so of course he doesn't stick around long. The movie ignores geopolitical context in favor of long, slow-motion sequences of heroes dying noble deaths to an overwrought electric guitar score by Explosions in the Sky. By the end it feels like a recruiting ad in which everybody dies. / Sean Burns (In the suburbs.)

Mr. Peabody & Sherman ★★ Another cartoon you grew up with gets the overblown, 3-D, CGI treatment, as the "Peabody's Improbable History" segment from Rocky and His Friends and The Bullwinkle Show trips through time into 2014. Director Rob Minkoff (The Lion King) updates the cartoon classic that featured a Nobel-winning talking beagle and his "pet boy"—and it's for the dogs. As bad as that pun is, there are worse ones in this film, which I concede is appropriate, since the 5-minute-long TV adventures created by the late Ted Key dealt them like cards. Alas, little of the dry wit from Mr. Peabody and Sherman's original journeys into the past remains, replaced by a screenplay that makes the common franchise-building fumble of focusing on an origin story. Ty Burrell does a serviceable job voicing Peabody, but not casting, say, John Hodgman or David Hyde Pierce to recreate Bill Scott's vintage vocal performance seems like just one of many missed opportunities. If only there really were a WABAC machine, then maybe someone could go back and fix this mutt of a movie. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Nebraska ★★ Everything about Nebraska, Alexander Payne's sixth feature and first stinker, feels secondhand. It's a gimmicky sitcom script gussied up with self-consciously "artful" affectations borrowed from the New Hollywood heyday of the early '70s. Except it doesn't even get those right. The picture's entire aesthetic design comes off like a wise-ass kid dressing up in his cool uncle's old clothes and wearing them wrong. The terminally bland Will Forte stars as a stereo salesman who takes a road trip with his gruff, alcoholic father (Bruce Dern), who thinks he's won a million dollars from a Publishers Clearing House-type sweepstakes letter he recently got in the mail. There's a tension between Dern's crumbling old-school masculinity and Forte's modern-guy ineffectualness that goes maddeningly unexplored. It's just really boring and sad. The pacing is so gummed up by homages to The Last Picture Show that if you removed all the shots of deteriorating storefronts, this 115-minute film would barely be feature length. Despite the ostentatious visual scheme and constant callbacks to cinematic giants, Nebraska feels flatter than the landscapes it depicts. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Need for Speed ★ Barely 10 minutes into this adaptation of the eponymous video game, director Scott Waugh posits his cast at a drive-in theater that's showing 1968's Bullitt. And not just any scene, but Steve McQueen's famed high-speed chase through the streets of San Francisco in a modified Ford Mustang. Way to set an impossibly high bar for yourself, Waugh. Breaking Bad's Aaron Paul plays Tobey Marshall, a mechanic/street racer tapped by Dino Brewster (Dominic Cooper)—a slimeball who's also sleeping with Tobey's ex—to rebuild a mythical Shelby Mustang, which promises to pay our grease monkey protagonist enough to save the family-run garage. Sounds good, until Marshall is framed for both vehicular manslaughter and the theft of two supercars. It's more Grand Theft Auto than Need for Speed, and Paul looks so constipated behind the wheel on his revenge-fueled race across the country that it's no wonder he can't supply the film with any real gas. / Brett Michel (At Boston Common.)

Non-Stop ★★½ "The TSA!" bellows the co-pilot of a transatlantic flight gone horribly wrong. "They gave a paranoid alcoholic a gun and a badge, and they put him on my plane! Jesus!" No, the son of God isn't on this jetliner; it's just Liam Neeson, reliably springing into action, yet again, in this latest thriller from Jaume Collet-Serra (director of Neeson's Unknown and the ridiculous adoption chiller Orphan). Certainly, air marshal Bill Marks is a drunk: The image of him swirling whiskey in a well-worn paper cup with a toothbrush, while seated behind the wheel of his car, before stumbling into LaGuardia says more about him than the quote above. But he still has every right to be paranoid, since someone begins sending him threatening text messages moments after lifting off from New York, bound for London. The mystery man or woman is demanding that our hungover hero transfer $150 million into an offshore account, lest a passenger be executed every 20 minutes. It's like one of Agatha Christie's taut, locked-room mysteries, until 9/11 enters the plot.

Pompeii ½ Stop me if you've heard this one before: A society girl falls for a rakish boy beneath her class, and the pair's doomed romance takes a titanic turn for the worse when disaster strikes. Ah, but this is Pompeii, circa A.D. 79, and not even volcanic lava could supply this tepid love story with any real heat. Perhaps director and Resident Evil auteur (ahem) Paul W.S. Anderson needs his muse/wife, Milla Jovovich, to keep him focused, although Lemony Snicket's Emily Browning makes for a fetching leading lady—until she's required to part her pouty lips and speak. But it's the film's hackneyed script that serves as its iceberg, with choice lines of dialogue like this one, delivered by a bored onscreen observer of gladiatorial combat: "I'm looking for something new, something fresh." So am I, brother, but it's not here. Even Game of Thrones' Kit Harington as a slave turned invincible gladiator can't help Anderson win this battle. Cue the volcano! / Brett Michel (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Saving Mr. Banks ★½ Purporting to be the true story of how Walt Disney convinced uptight author P.L. Travers to let him adapt her precious Mary Poppins books for the big screen, Saving Mr. Banks is a steaming plate of corporate propaganda with a side of character assassination. It's also a movie about a contract negotiation, and about as interesting as that sounds. Though in real life she was reportedly a bar-crawling bisexual single mother, the film presents Travers as a miserable spinster played by a tut-tutting Emma Thompson, who seems to be channeling the host of Weakest Link. Tom Hanks' twinkly Uncle Walt not only wins her over with whimsy, but also therapeutically resolves Travers' issues about her long-dead alcoholic father (well played by Colin Farrell in flashbacks) until tears and soppy music ensue. Saving Mr. Banks advocates artists selling out to a corporation that always knows best. Hanks smuggles in a few grace notes of prickly determination in a movie that's otherwise an infomercial for the company that produced it. / Sean Burns (At West Newton.)

Tim's Vermeer ★★½ Magicians Penn and Teller have spent a career playfully twisting and debunking aspects of their act, in recent years taking a similar approach to the wider culture as well, à la their pointedly titled television show Bullshit!. This initially engrossing but ultimately thin documentary, directed by Teller, may have been better suited for a TV segment. The Tim of the title is Tim Jenison, an inventor and tech whiz who made millions in the video industry. Obsessed with the idea that Dutch master Johannes Vermeer was using optics to create his unparalleled portraits, Tim rigs up a mirrored contraption based on 17th-century camera obscura equipment and sets about painting his own replica of The Music Lesson. Like most Penn and Teller projects, Tim's Vermeer shows you the trickery behind the trick and leaves you astounded all the same. There are some fascinating ideas here about the arbitrary line drawn by historians between invention and artistry, but even at 80 minutes the film feels distended and dragged out. / Sean Burns (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

created—a visual montage as portrait of our world and times—has become its own cliche. So, taking a slight detour from the color-filled images of our natural and created world seen in previous efforts, Visitors is presented in black-and-white. Almost. The low-resolution digital imagery on display lacks contrast, offering neither deep blacks nor bright whites, making me long for the 35mm film that cinematographer Ron Fricke employed on Koyaanisqatsi, and especially the 70mm of 2011's Samsara, the slightly more coherent, Reggio-less offshoot that Fricke directed and photographed. Reggio's theme of humanity's trance-like relationship with technology gets lost within the 74 alternatively slow-motion and time-lapse shots that compose Visitors. Damningly, the movie is "presented by Steven Soderbergh," an artist who—unlike Reggio— rarely repeated himself. Sadly, he's also stuck to his planned retirement from directing. Way to rub it in that you're gone, Steven. / Brett Michel (At Kendall Square.)

The Wind Rises ★★★½ Master animator Hayao Miyazaki has announced this will be his final film, and it's quite the departure from his fantasy tales. A relatively straightforward biopic of aeronautical engineer Jiro Horikoshi, The Wind Rises doubles as a lyrical, doom-laden portrait of a country on the precipice of disaster, and a sad meditation on the role of an artist during wartime. Nearsighted Jiro is obsessed with aviation but unfit to fly, channeling his passion into designing planes. As Japan gears up for World War II, the movie sinks into a melancholy groove, admiring Jiro's spirited innovations while dreading the inevitable outcome. It works in a slower, sadder register than most contemporary pictures, dwelling on small moments of beauty with an apocalypse on the horizon. As with most Miyazaki movies, Disney has prepared an English language dub for American theaters. I'm not sure it was necessary this time, as this mournful tale is decidedly not for children. The dubbed version does, however, boast Werner Herzog as a sly, mysterious German, so kudos on the voice casting. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Winter's Tale ★ The darndest barrel of nonsense to hit screens in quite some time, hack screenwriter Akiva Goldsman's directorial debut is a goofy, unintentionally hilarious take on Mark Helprin's novel. Colin Farrell stars as a dashing burglar with a heart of gold, falling madly in love with a young heiress dying of consumption, and they both end up flying on a winged pegasus through turn-of-the-century New York City. Farrell's on the run from Russell Crowe's scar-faced mob boss, who speaks in a comical Lucky Charms Irish accent and also happens to be an ancient demon. There's much ado about prophesies and miracles, as characters run around frantically trying to explain the mumbo-jumbo rules of this fantasy universe to one another—and all that's before the story leaps ahead a century, when Farrell emerges from the East River with no memory and we have to start all over again. By the time an unbilled superstar randomly shows up as Satan, I was convinced I'd fallen asleep in the theater and was having the strangest dream. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Wolf of Wall Street ★★★★ An obscenity, an abomination and the movie this country deserves right now. Martin Scorsese's epic assault on propriety and good taste stars Leonardo DiCaprio as stockbroker scumbag Jordan Belfort, one of the countless who looted the American Dream and gagged on the spoils of wretched excess. It's another Scorsese gangster picture, only this time it's white-collar and played out as a broad, bilious farce. Pumped up with adrenaline and cocaine, the picture blasts off like a rocket ship into such a frenzied orgy of sex, drugs and decadence that both Hunter S. Thompson and Federico Fellini might consider it a bit much. The Wolf of Wall Street zings at warp speed from one fiendishly entertaining, appalling set piece to another, until the movie's gargantuan three-hour running time reveals Scorsese's moral severity. It's all too much too-much-ness about people for whom too much was never enough. The grotesque excess becomes deadening and the emptiness chilling. DiCaprio is fearlessly smarmy, Jonah Hill makes a revolting sidekick, and they heroically debase themselves in the funniest, angriest movie of the year. / Sean Burns (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

MUSIC

Edited by Sarah Hagman

FROM BALL TO BASS Ron Pope never planned on pursuing a career in music. But as a baseball player at Rutgers University, Pope suffered a career-ending injury and landed at NYU, where he began to explore his second passion. After a couple of years spent fronting his popular college band, the Distriet, he started a solo career, writing, producing and recording his own music. Almost a decade after the success of his melancholy 2006 hit "A Drop in the Ocean," Pope explores more upbeat vibes with his latest album, Calling Off the Dogs. Join the musical Renaissance man on March 29 downstairs at the Middle East. / Ashley Rossi

BIRDS OF A FEATHER

The Gilded Age was defined by gold and glitz, but artist James McNeill Whistler took the trend to another level. When asked to tweak a color scheme for shipowner Frederick Leyland's dining room, Whistler's creative juices overflowed. He took the liberty of adding lavish details—including gobs of gold leaf and plumed peacocks—to the room's walls, much to its owner's chagrin. As part of his exhibit Uncertain Beauty, Darren Waterston reimagines the famed Peacock Room as a beautiful ruin, complete with oozing glaze, hand-painted ceramics askew and a mural of melting gold. Compare past and present takes on luxury through January at MASS MoCA. / Abagail Sullivan
